INTRODUCTION

The Inventory of Cultural Heritage in Baghdad was prepared solely by the author between 1975 and 1977 and is of fundamental importance to this study. It contains 603 architectural and other urban items presented in two volumes. Volume II contains items in Rusafa's historic core while Volume III contains items in Karkh's, Aadhamiya's, and Kadhimiya's historic cores.

Each inventory item is given a serial number and a standardised card containing relevant data such as its age, address, physical condition, and general and specific location maps. Some particularly interesting items have additional cards containing further photographs and/or plans. Although the items are presented serially some gaps in the numbering sequence have been left deliberately to allow for future insertions should fresh discoveries be made.

The methodology of the inventory, its criteria, scoring system and grading, is fully explained in Chapter VIII of Volume I (p. 325 ff.). The same chapter contains a list of the proposed Conservation Areas, Zones of Visual Interest, and Archaeological Sites in Baghdad, and also a detailed architectural and urban analysis of the individual items. A glossary of Arabic terms used in this work is found at the beginning of Volume I.

All grade A items are provided with a text on the historical background, architectural description and a list of references where available. Some grade B items, especially those of a definite quality or distinction, are also provided with a text; while only a very few grade C items are described.

The basic data on each item was coded and five different computer printouts are included in the Inventory. The first printout, which is found at the beginning of Volume II, shows the items arranged according to their serial number, and it is intended to be used as a convenient index to locate any item in the inventory by its serial number, or to read off the required data without necessarily referring to the Inventory card or its text. The codes are explained in a title sheet at the beginning of each printout. The remaining four printouts are found as appendices at the end of Volume III and show the items grouped according to their grade, physical condition, existing use, and ownership.

Finally, the two volumes of the inventory have been microfilmed and the films are in the possession of the author.

THE MIHRAB

A.1 ABBASID PALACE/SHARABIYA MADRASA

Historical Background This is one of the most important and outstanding historic monuments in Baghdad. Because of the lack of inscriptions on its existing fabric or specific contemporary references, its history remains somewhat uncertain. However, most Iraqi historians and scholars agree that its style and decoration show that it belongs to the late Abbasid period (1175-1230). As for its founder and original purpose, there are two main propositions:

- 1. according to Jawad and others, it was built as a palace by the Abbasid Caliph, Nassir, between 1180 and 1225 and was originally known as 'Dar al-Misanatt';
- 2. according to Maaruf and others, it was founded as a theological college by Sharaf al-Din al-Sharabi during the reign of Caliph Mustansir (1226-1242), was opened in 1230 and became known as 'al-Sharabiya Madrasa'.

The second proposition seems more plausible because the plan and functional layout of this building is typical of madrasas and because of its striking resemblance to Mustansiriya Madrasa whose date is definitely known to go back to 1234.

During the long Ottoman rule, it seems to have been incorporated within the Citadel and used as a store for military materials. It remained concealed by several adjacent buildings until it was discovered by European travellers during the late nineteenth century. Since 1934, the Directorate of Antiquities has been restoring it and it is now used as a museum.

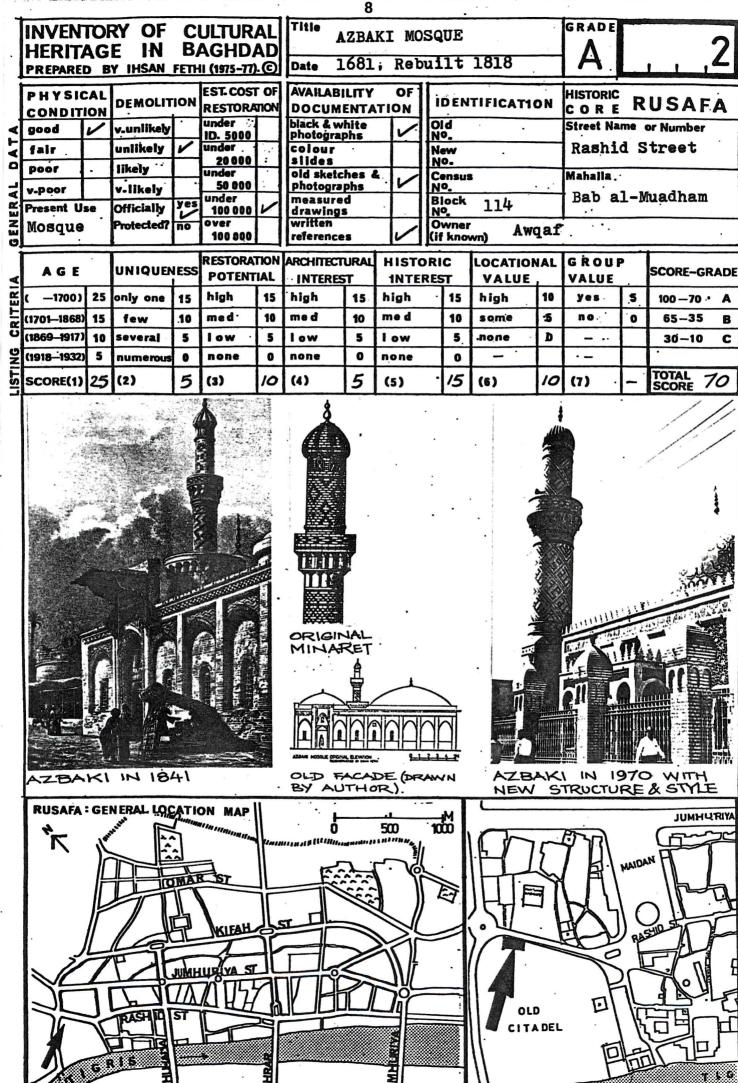

Architectural Description Similar to most other Islamic buildings in Iraq, this brick building is designed in 'peristyle' and consists basically of two storeys built around a squarish courtyard (20 x 21.5 m.). The ground floor is about 38 m. by 45 m. overall and contains 23 small rooms arranged on all four sides and separated from the courtyard by a narrow arcaded corridor. The roof structure of this corridor, arguably the most remarkable architectural feature in the building, is constructed in intricately mugarnased and carved brickwork. The eastern side of the courtyard contains a central, two-storey high (9 m.) iwan, 5 m. wide and 8.5 m. deep, and roofed by a pointed vault richly decorated in carved

A. 1 (Continued)

(filigree-like) brickwork. The western side, which faces the Tigris and may have contained the original main entrance, includes a small musalla (4.5 m. x 12 m.) with a simple mihrab, while the southern side contains seven large rooms located behind the first row of rooms and separated from them by a very narrow (1.28 m.) and high corridor (9.20 m.), 26.70 m. long. This is almost exactly similar to the corridor in Mustansiriya which is, interestingly, also located at the southern side of the Madrasa. The first floor, which was mostly ruined until the recent restoration, closely follows the plan of the ground floor.

The successive restoration work by the Antiquities indicates a certain amount of conjecture, especially the internal facades of the upper storey and the riverfront wall and its portal. In fact, due to the uncertainty of the restorer in charge, several different 'versions' of decorated patterns for the upper storey tympanums and spandrels were carried out which is very disturbing. This most distinguished Abbasid monument appears to have been over-restored: its present look is too 'clinical' to give comfort for serious conservationists.

A.2 AZBAKI MOSQUE

Historical Background This mosque owes its name to Imam Quli Khan, a Prince from Uzbek who died in Baghdad in 1650 while on his way to Mecca. The Mosque, which originally contained the tomb of Quli Khan, was built by his brother, Abd al-Aziz Khan in 1681. It underwent a major restoration during the rule of Daud Pasha in 1818. In the early 1960's, it was demolished and rebuilt by the Ministry of Defence and the Awqaf when the Citadel was redeveloped.

Architectural Description The old Mosque was built against the wall of the Citadel and next to Bab al-Muadham Gate. Its plan, which was roughly 11 m. by 18 m. overall, included a rectangular musalla and a square room in which the tomb was placed. The musalla and the tomb were each surmounted by a large depressed dome (segmental in section). these two domes was a small decorative minaret (it contained no staircase) which was a rare example in the city. The street-front was in nine bays with the second southernmost taken up by a doorway and a portal. one of the few mosques in Baghdad which had an elaborate elevation. The new existing mosque is almost totally different from the original one although it is built on the same site. It contains a small rectangular musalla surmounted by a pointed dome which is finished in glazed kashani tiles arranged in a floral pattern. The free-standing minaret consists of an octagonal base and a cylindrical body which contains a balcony corbelled out in two rows of mugarnas. Its body is finished in glazed kashani tiles arranged according to a diagonal pattern with the words of Allah and Muhammad in Kufic type, and is crowned by a fluted cupola and a beaded The upper part of the street-front is framed by a long bronze finial. strip of Quranic inscritpions in Kufic, and the parapet is adorned by leaf-like crenellations. The demolition of the old Azbakı Mosque was not really necessary in the first place and its subsequent rebuilding was a particularly bad example of 'reconstruction'.

A.3 QALAA MOSQUE

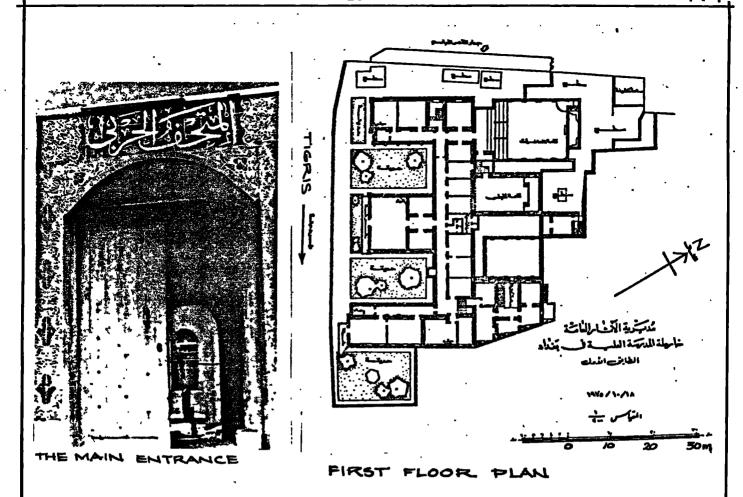

Historical Background According to the late Iraqi historian, Mustafa Jawad, this Mosque was first built during the reign of the Abbasid Caliph, Nassir (1180-1221). However, Azzawi believes that it was first built by a certain Shaikh Jalal al-Din Baha al-Din during the occupation of Baghdad by Sultan Murad in 1638. He quoted a waqfiya dated 10th Ramadhan 1048/1638 to support his argument. There are no available old photographs or sketches of this Mosque to give a hint about its possible origin. It was rebuilt differently with modern materials like reinforced concrete by the Awqaf during the early 1960's.

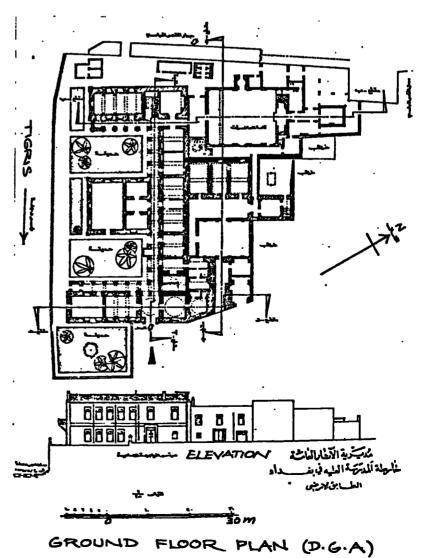

Architectural Description The existing new Mosque consists of a square musalla (about 9 m. by 9 m.) with a simple mihrab on its south-western side, a minaret on the northern corner, and an arcaded portico on the north-eastern side. The musalla is surmounted by a small pointed dome which is externally self-finished in concrete. The minaret is provided with a balcony projected by means of concrete brackets and not the It is finished with glazed kashani tiles and the facia traditional mugarnas. of the balcony is adorned in typical medallions with Kufic inscriptions alternately containing the names of Allah and Muhammad. Its upper section is decorated by spiral bands, and crowned by a turquoise fluted cupola and a three-bead finial. The front facade is designed in five bays with the central one taken up by the frontispiece, and the upper part of which is provided with a strip of Quranic inscriptions in Thulth type. this Mosque is of little architectural value but its site is of important locational and historical interest. More research is needed to trace its historical background.

OLD CITADEL

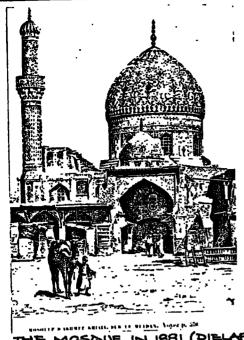

A. 4 ALIYA MADRASA

Historical Background According to Azzawi and Durubi, this Madrasa was first built by the Wali, Ali Pasha, in 1762. Alusi wrote that it contained the graves of Ali Pasha and several other well-known personalities but all of these have now disappeared. The Madrasa was extensively renovated and then converted into a workshop for orphans by Midhat Pasha in 1869. It became known as 'al-Sanai Madrasa' and contained the printing press for the first newspaper in Iraq, al-Zawra. It was used by King Faisal I as his residence during the 1920's, but later became a parliament until the mid-1950's. It was used as a military 'people's court' in the late 1950's and was annexed by the Ministry of Defence to become a military museum. In 1975, the Directorate of Antiquities took it over and it is now undergoing a major restoration.

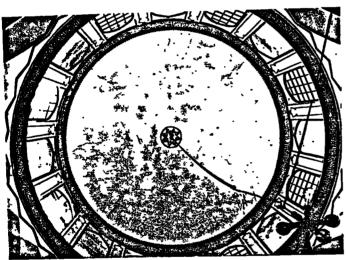

Architectural Description Maps of Baghdad prepared during the early decades of this century indicate that the building was E-shaped in plan. However, plans prepared by the Directorate of Antiquities in 1975 show that several rooms have been added to the building since the 1920's. E-shaped part of the Madrasa, which is the older one, is about 30 m. by 58 m. overall including two open courtyards. The courtyards face the Tigris River, are about 10 m. by 18 m. in dimensions, and surrounded by cloisters of segmental arches. It is difficult to identify the purpose of each room of this older part which consists of some seventeen rooms The ground floor includes the Assembly Hall which was of different sizes. used for the Iraqi Parliament. It is about 14 m. wide and 26 m. long and of modern historic interest. The first floor is largely similar to the ground floor one and also contains arcaded corridors around the courtyards. It is possible that most of the present fabric may belong to Midhat Pasha's conversion and not to the original Aliya Madrasa. Further research is required if correct restoration is to be achieved.

A.5 AHMADIYA MOSQUE

Historical Background This monumental Mosque, also known as Midan Mosque, was built in 1796 by Ahmad Pasha but was completed after his death by his brother Abd Allah Beg. Since its erection it has been one of the most notable landmarks in Baghdad.

Architectural Description The Mosque is rectangular in plan measuring about 22 m. by 28 m. including a portico. The musalla consists of three aisles, the central one being surmounted by a large dome (about 11 m. in diameter) raised on a drum and supported by four massive piers. squinches with lateral niches transform the base of the dome into an The other two aisles are only about 4 m. by 11 m. and each is octagon. surmounted by a dome on triangular pendentives. The mihrab is high and surrounded by a rectangular frame of decorative tiles. The portico, which is located on the north-eastern side, is covered by shallow domes on pendentives and supported by solid piers. The central frontispiece of this portico is emphasised by its height and superbly recessed pointed arch. The main dome and the other two small domes are finished in richly decorated Arabesque kashani tiles. The joint between the main dome and its drum is enhanced by an inscription band in Thulth type which also is repeated on the inside of the dome. The drum is pierced by eight arched windows alternating with another eight blind ones. The interior surface of the main dome is plastered in white but adorned at the apex by an octogram (eight-pointed star) painted medallion. The dome is crowned by The minaret, located on the northernmost corner a five-bead metal finial. of the portico, is somewhat slender in proportion. It consists of an octagonal base and a cylindrical upper body which includes a balcony and a turquoise fluted cupola. The upper and middle part of the minaret are decorated by kashani tiles in geometric Kufic-like 'Alliyat' pattern, while the base is decorated in a polygonal pattern of geometric shapes. balcony is corbelled out in two rows of mugarnas and its facia is adorned by decorative tile medallions alternately inscribed with the names of Allah and Muhammad.

A. 6 PASHA HAMMAM

Historical Background This building must have been one of the grandest and most monumental hammams in Irag. This is indicated by its surviving dome of the central hot room now used as a furniture store. There are no written references about its history or description to throw more light upon its former appearance or condition. Its age, therefore. remains unknown. Although some aged local people said that it was built by Nadir Shah (1743), its name suggests that it was built by an Ottoman Pasha. It is tentatively suggested here that it was probably built by Hasan Pasha (1704-1723) who is known to have built the nearby Sarai Mosque and Sarai Buildings. The Hammam continued to function until 1962 when most of its fabric was pulled down to be replaced by the multi-storey Iqari Bank Building.

Architectural Description Originally, the Hammam occupied a roughly triangular plot located between the Midan Suq and what is now known as Hasan Ibn Thabit Street. It seems that it was used only by women although a small men's section might have been incorporated within its complex. An oblique aerial photograph, taken around 1954 by Aerofilms Ltd. (Negative No. 3302), shows its roof structure with several domes. It must have consisted of several rooms and spaces typical of Iraqi hammams, including a disrobing room, an intermediate room, and a central hot room. The latter, which survives today, is about 15 m. by 15 m. surmounted by a large dome of about 13 m. in diameter. The dome is elliptical in section and rests on massive brick walls, with eight large squinches running down to the floor. Further research and site investigation could reveal useful information about its former plan. Preservation of the remaining fabric is urgently needed as it is badly neglected and could be demolished soon.

A.7 NUMANIYA MOSQUE

Historical Background This small Tomb-Mosque was built in 1772 by Fatima Biktash al-Sayid Wali to commemorate her husband, Numan Agha Ibrahim.

Architectural Description The Mosque is adjacent to Markaziya School and is entered from the garden of Sulaimaniya Madrasa. It consists of a small room (about 3 x 3 m.) in which the tomb is placed and a small Its old musalla and madrasa, which are referred to in several accounts, do not exist today and must have been pulled down. is surmounted by a small fluted conical dome which is unique in Baghdad and typical of domes in northern Iraq and in Turkey. The minaret. located on the north-eastern wall, has a balcony corbelled out in two rows of mugarnas, with its facia adorned by kashani octagram medallions. The lower and upper parts of the minaret are finished in kashani tiles set diagonally and arranged in Kufic type. It is crowned by an unfluted cupola which is rare for minarets of recent date. Although it is officially protected by the Awqaf, it is very badly neglected and could be demolished. There is a real need for its repair, restoration and documentation.

A.8 SARAI MOSQUE (Also HASAN PASHA)

Historical Background This important Mosque owes its name to Hasan Pasha, the Wali who restored it in 1704. There is some controversy about its possible origin. According to Alusi, it was much older than this date and may go back to the late Abbasid period. According to Jawad and Jamil. it was rebuilt in place of al-Masjid al-Kabir built by the Caliph Nassir However, according to Azzawi, it was built by Sulaiman the Magnificent in 1534 and the famous Ottoman traveller Evilia Celebi who visited Baghdad in 1656 called it Sulaimani Mosque. Several sources suggest that it contained the Tomb of Caliph Nassir but this is rejected by Because of its proximity to the administratively important Sarai Buildings, it became the favourite mosque of Pashas in Iraq. continued to use it throughout his reign. Recently, it underwent a major restoration by the Awqaf, resulting in the loss of some of its old fabric.

Architectural Description The Mosque is about 26 m. by 43 m. overall including a rectangular musalla (14 m. by 35 m.) and a portico. musalla consists of two aisles which are parallel to the qibla wall. the musalla and the portico are surmounted by small pointed domes with triangular pendentives. The original minaret was free-standing and located outside the mosque building proper, while the present one rests on one of the thick piers of the portico. The minaret is provided with a balcony corbelled out in two rows of muqarnas and, unlike the rest of the mosque, it is finished in coloured kashani tiles. It is crowned by a fluted cupola finished in turquoise tiles and a three-bead metal finial. street facade is composed of five recessed pointed arches with windows inside them to provide light into the musalla. The entrance portal is integrated with the general facade and the whole building is now framed by a decorative frieze at the top. The fifteen domes of this Mosque cannot be seen from street level and one has to go up to the roof to appreciate their interesting form and massing.

WAZIR MOSQUE IN 1976

A VIEW OF THE NEW MOSQUE FROM THE NEARBY BRIDGE IN 1957

B.12 WAZIR MOSQUE

Historical Background The origin of this Mosque is not certain. According to Azzawi and Durubi, it was first built by the Caliph Mustansir Jawad and Susa suggest that its site was occupied between 1226 and 1242. by a Hanafi Madrasa known as Tutushiya after the Seljuq Sultan Tutush. However, it is certain that it was rebuilt by Hassan Pasha in 1600. date was inscribed on its original magnificent portal which, among other things, stated: "This Mosque was built during the reign of Sultan Muhammad Khan b. Sultan Murad Khan... by the Wazir Hassan Pasha b. Muhammad Pasha in the year 1008". It was one of the biggest mosques in Baghdad and its former imposing size is clearly shown in the fine drawings by the French artist Flandin who visited Mesopotamia around 1840. One of his engravings, shown in the inventory card, shows that its huge dome was of the doubleshell type and that it was built directly on the river-bank. Mosque was unfortunately ruined by the severe floods of 1831 reported by the artist Robert Clive around 1850:

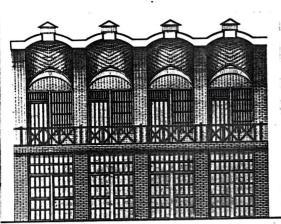

"The mosque is comparatively modern building, about 300 years old. It was undermined during the inundation in the year 1831, when part of the dome and the side fronting the river fell down. The Pasha on being asked to rebuilt it, replied: 'if God had willed that it should remain he would have kept it in repair, but that he would not oppose the decrees of heavens by attempting to restore it".

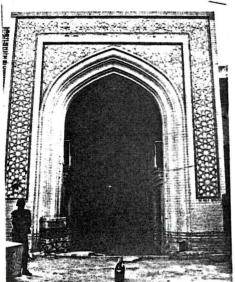

It was rebuilt in the late nineteenth century but with three small domes. It fell into disrepair and was demolished in 1949 by the Awqaf but rebuilt in 1957, this time with one small dome but with a similar minaret to the original one.

Architectural Description The present Mosque consists of a small square musalla 13 m. by 13 m., a portico and an open courtyard. The musalla is surmounted by a dome about 7 m. in diameter, and there is another summer musalla with its own mihrab in the courtyard. The minaret is located outside the building and contains one balcony corbelled out in three rows of muqarnas. It is finished in fine kashani tiles in Kufic type set diagonally, and crowned by a turquoise colour fluted cupola and a metal finial.

A.13 SARAJIN SUQ

Historical Background This is arguably the best preserved suq in Baghdad today. It was built (or rebuilt) by Sulaiman Pasha in 1802 and allocated for saddle-makers and other handicrafts which are associated with leatherwork. The Awqaf, which owns it, has recently restored it to its former condition but with some modifications, especially its external facades and frontispiece.

Architectural Description The Sug is basically rectangular in plan measuring some 16 m. by 60 m. overall. It consists of a central vaulted pathway, about 2.5 m. wide, with a row of small shops on It is built in two floors of almost identical design and either side. arrangement. The ground floor contains some 32 shops, while the upper floor 30 shops. The upper shops are reached by means of several different stairways leading to a circulatory balcony on both sides which is corbelled by three oversailing brick courses. is composed of twenty bays each of which is surmounted by a shallow brick dome pierced at the apex with an oculus and supported by pointed vaults built in parquet-like (Hasiri) pattern. The domes which surmount the two crossings with the adjacent Sarai Sug are emphasised by their larger size and height, and are supported by vaults and triangular cross-ribbed pendentives and adorned by turquoise colour mosaic. The doors of the shops and the balustrade of the balcony of the original Suq were both of wood but were regrettably replaced by iron in the recent restoration which started in 1974. However, by and large, this restoration is a successful example by the Awgaf.

ARCHWAY TO GOLDSMITHS

STREET FRONT

B. 14 BAGHDADI MUSEUM

Historical Background It is not exactly known when and why this large public building was built, but its style and detailing suggest that a date of around the early decade of this century might be correct. It was probably built by the Turks to house some administrative office. It was personally chosen by Gertrude Bell in 1923 to house the new Iraqi Museum and it continued to do so until 1964. It is now used by Amanat al-Assima for its Baghdadi Museum, Library and Town Planning Offices.

Architectural Description There are no measured drawings or sketch plans to help describe the internal planning of this building. However, it is basically L-shaped in plan, containing two open courtyards and several large basements. It is in two floors each totalling over 2,000 sq.m. in area. The street front, which faces southeast, is about 70 m. long and fenestrated by a series of groups of three arched windows. A centrally located, barrel-vaulted archway leads to the adjacent Sagha Suq (Goldsmiths), and its vault is built in parquet brickwork in concentric diamonds pattern. The line of the upper storey as well as the parapet of the wings are emphasised by a muqarnased frieze typical of the period. It is now marred by hanging wires and by outside water coolers. It needs to be cleaned, restored and documented.

A.15 CITADEL WALL

Historical Background The wall of Eastern Baghdad was first built by the Caliph Mustadh'hir between AD 1095 and 1118 and was completed by his son, Caliph Mustarishid, between 1118 and 1135. restored in 1173 by Caliph Mustadhi, in 1221 by Caliph Nasir, and in 1642 by Walı Kuchuk Hasan Pasha. The wall continued to provide protection against attacks and against floods until 1869 when it was However, he kept the four Gates and demolished by Midhat Pasha. the walled citadel. The citadel, which has been a prominent feature and the seat of power of the city since the fifteenth century or earlier, was used by the British Army as its headquarters after its capture of Baghdad in March 1917. Since the early 1930's the citadel has undergone several major redevelopments by the Iraqi Ministry of Defence. Most of its old wall and its interesting vaulted and domed buildings were demolished and replaced by modern ones. Only a small section of the wall, located between Azbaki Mosque and Qa'at al-Sha'ab (a public theatre), remains today. Because it is the only existing physical evidence of the old wall of Baghdad it should be regarded as extremely However, it is now somewhat neglected and is almost totally sandwiched between the afore-mentioned buildings and therefore it is difficult to appreciate or examine it.

Architectural Description The remaining section of the citadel wall is about six metres long and four point five metres high. Its upper part is crenellated and contains some traces of loopholes. The only surviving Gate of Baghdad, the Wastani Gate (No. 373), shows broadly similar crenellations and building construction.

B.18 SALIMA DAUD HOUSE

Historical Background This distinguished house, which is located near the Sarai Mosque, was probably built around 1900 or even slightly earlier. This is indicated by its construction and detailing. Its original owner is not known but locals say that it was once owned by the Mitawalli family and that it was occupied by a certain Mr. Fisher who was the Chief of the Fire Department during the 1930's. It is now used as a workshop by a carpenter making furniture.

Architectural Description The house is built on a corner and therefore has The street front, facing southwest, consists of a plain brick wall with a decorated portal at ground floor, and three serrated wooden shanashil windows at first floor level. The shanashils, which project about 80 cms. and helped by four oversailing brick courses, are supported by wooden brackets placed at about 80 cms. centres. They are all rectangular in shape and provided with iron bars and wooden shutters. To shade them from strong sunlight, a wooden canopy is fixed just below It is not sure whether this canopy is an original feature the cornice line. or a later addition because it is more typical of traditional houses in Basra The side facade is a plain brick wall with a 'blind' than in Baghdad. projecting window which has only one small opening in front. constructed in a timber frame filled in brickwork. The wooden cornices of all shanashil windows are curved and crested by ornamental chain The roof parapet is made of corrugated tin sheets supported 'sachagh'. by wooden posts.

The interior is designed in peristyle and consists of a central square courtyard with rooms all round. The ground floor includes a colonnaded talar and a superbly vaulted neem cellar. The long entrance passage is also vaulted but in very intricate muqarnas brickwork. The upper storey includes simple ursi windows made up of small modular windows with segmental arches at the top. The courtyard, which is now covered by corrugated iron sheets, is framed by a curved and crested cornice. The tarma and the balcony are provided by a wrought iron balustrade in typical Baghdadi voluted pattern. The present use of this house has harmed its fabric and there is a real need to repair it, change its use to a more suitable one, and document it.

B. 22 SHABANDAR HOUSE (1)

Historical Background This large house, which belongs to a well-known Baghdadı family, was probably built around 1880 or slightly earlier. This is indicated by its style and construction. It is now occupied by several independent households, each living in one of its rooms, and this has resulted in a marked deterioration of its fabric.

Architectural Description The house has only one street front and this consists of a simple shanashil window on first floor level and a plain brick wall and an entrance door at ground floor level. The shanashil window is projected about 40 cms. and supported on the ends of timber beams, and consists of three modular windows with segmental heads and provided with iron bars. The absence of a decorated portal suggests that the door and its arch have been changed. It is probable that this house was the 'haram' section of the original and that the adjacent house served as the 'diwankhana' section. Inside, the house is L-shaped in plan and includes a large open courtyard about 10 m. by 10 m., and two colonnaded tarmas, one on each floor. There is an octagonal pool and a fountain in the middle of the courtyard. The wooden columns have There are two vaulted neem cellars. typical mugarnased capitals. The windows and the door openings of both floors have segmental arches and the windows of the upper storey are provided with a foliated ornament in their fanlight. The tarma and the circulatory balcony have a wroughtiron balustrade in typical Baghdadi voluted style. Many of the original features and ornaments have been removed and the house suffers from serious neglect. This is one of the most interesting houses in the mahalla and deserves urgent attention. The accretions and other modern. additions should be removed, the original features restored and its fabric documented.

B. 25 QISHTAINI HOUSE

Historical Background Because of the use of jack-arching, this large house was probably built around 1920 or slightly earlier. Its size indicates that it was built for a rich owner. It is now used by several carpenters and some of its rooms are occupied by poor households.

Architectural Description The house occupies a rectangular plot about 15 m. by 20 m. overall. The external facade, which faces southwest, consists of a plain brick wall at ground floor level and an eighteen-metre long projected upper storey forming one long shanashil feature. The projection, about 80 cms., is achieved by cantilevering the upper storey by means of I-section steel joists clearly expressed on the outside. The shanashil includes some fourteen modular windows with pointed arch fanlights and iron bars. The whole facade is framed at the top by a well curved wooden cornice crested with ornamental chain sachagh. The present door is a recent modern replacement.

Inside, the house is planned around a central open courtyard, about 10 m. by 10 m., and includes a colonnaded talar and tarma. wooden columns have typical mugarnased capitals, while the ceilings are decorated by wooden battens arranged to form a pattern of concentric diamonds (badami design). The tarma and the circulatory balcony of the upper storey are provided with typical Baghdadi voluted wrought-iron A hearth with a chimney is built on the first floor and recessed within a segmental arch. This is one of the few surviving examples in Baghdad and it was used for making tea or coffee for guests which suggests that the upper storey was the diwankhana section of the The roof opening over the courtyard is framed by a wooden cornice and guarded by a wrought-iron balustrade. Other features of interest included a vaulted neem cellar and a vaulted entrance passage which includes a shallow dome (araqchin) supported by two pointed arches and triangular cross-ribbed pendentives. This is an interesting house which needs to be protected, restored and documented.

TEGRISO,

A. 28 UTHMAN ASKARAI TOMB-MOSQUE

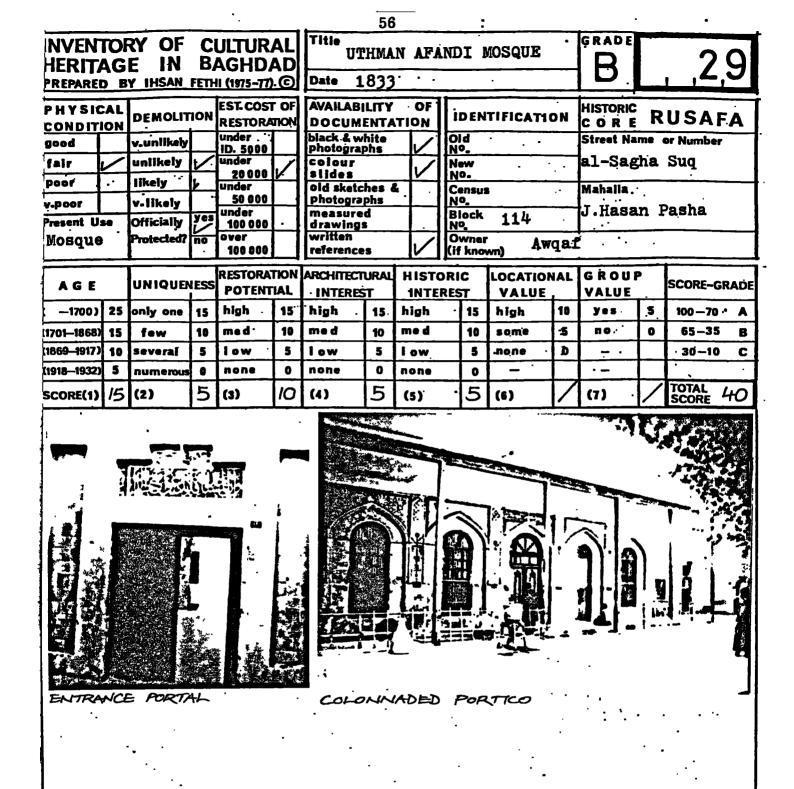

Historical Background Only one published reference was located by the author about this small but important Tomb-Mosque and it seems to have been overlooked by most historians. According to a modern inscription inside the Mosque, the tomb is that of Uthman b. Said al-Umari al-Askari who was the First Naib (Deputy) of the Shii Twelver Imams. Uthman was the contemporary of the two Imams, al-Hadi (b. 868) and his son al-Hasan al-Askari. If the inscription is correct, and there is no obvious reason why it should not be, then the Tomb is about 1100 years old which makes it one of the most important historical sites in the city. However, the late Iraqi historian, Jawad, rejected this possibility on the basis of a reference by Abu Jaafar al-Tusi (d. 1068) in his book Kitab al-Ghaiba, pp. 228-232, in which he said:

"The grave of Uthman b. Said is in the western side of Baghdad, in Maidan Street and in the darb known as 'Darb Jibla... I saw the grave, it was behind a wall in which there was a mihrab, and it was inside a small dark building. It remained so during my stay in Baghdad (1017-1038) until it was rebuilt as a proper tomb with a sunduq by Abu Mansur Muhammad b. Faraj (around 1050)."

Jawad took the 'western side' to be that of Karkh and 'Maidan Street' to be that of Maidan al-Ashnan in Karkh. He believed that the Tomb in this Mosque is of another person. The building is listed provisionally here as grade A pending further investigation into the question of the authenticity of this tomb.

Architectural Description The Mosque occupies a triangular plot of about 150 sq. m. located in Suq al-Midan and opposite Hammam al-Pasha. Externally, it is indicated by a small portal with kashani decoration and the rest of its facade is taken by shops. The portal shows an inscription that the Mosque was restored in 1348/1930. The interior consists of a small open courtyard with a mihrab, and a square room with the Tomb surmounted by a small pointed dome. The Tomb is placed in a sanduq and surrounded by a wooden screen and covered by green drapery. Apart from the Tomb, nothing 'old' seems to have survived the restoration of 1930.

B. 29 UTHMAN AFANDI MOSQUE

Historical Background This small Mosque was built by Ali Afandi (also known as Amin al-Fanawi) in 1833. The Mosque was also known as 'Masjid al-Khawaja'. In 1900 it was used as a primary school and in 1908 it became a religious madrasa. In 1922 it underwent a major restoration by the Awqaf resulting in the loss of much of its original fabric.

Architectural Description The Mosque occupies a squarish plot about 20 m. by 20 m. overall and located within the Sagha Suq of goldsmiths. It consists of a rectangular musalla about 8 m. by 15 m., an open courtyard, and a colonnaded portico with a mihrab. Both the musalla and the portico have flat roofs constructed with jack-arching. This is unlike the original Mosque which must have been either vaulted and domed or roofed by timber joists covered by reed mats. The internal facade of the portico facing the courtyard consists of five pointed arches whose spandrels are decorated with geometric brick mosaic, while the door and windows have semi-circular fanlights and are provided with iron bars. The entrance portal is simply designed and contains a Quranic inscription in kashani tiles in Thulth type.

It is curious why this Mosque is called Uthman when its founder was Ali or Amin and this suggests that Ali might have rebuilt an older mosque on the same site but kept its original name. However, this needs further investigation.

B. 30 SULAIMANIYA MADRASA

Historical Background This religious school was built by Abu Said Sulaiman Pasha the Wali of Baghdad in 1792. The name of its founder and the date of its erection are shown on its superbly decorated portal. The Madrasa was rebuilt, probably in the 1930's, and lost much of its original fabric except the portal. It is now used only as a mosque.

Architectural Description The Madrasa is adjacent to the Numaniya Mosque and the old wall which must have separated their courtyards It consists of a rectangular musalla, about has been demolished. 8 m. by 20 m., and a colonnaded portico. Both of the musalla and the portico have flat roofs constructed in jack-arching. The musalla is provided with several rectangular windows with iron bars and devoid The most interesting feature in this Madrasa is its of any decoration. It consists of a spirally edged pointed arch recessed about 70 cms. by means of an intricate brick mugarnas work. The tympanum contains an anthology, written on kashani glazed tiles and in Farisi The anthology consists of fourteen equal lines set in lozengeshaped kashanı medallıons. The spandrels of the arch are decorated in brick mosaic inlaid with turquoise colour.

A.31 NAJIB SAHRAWARDI TOMB

Historical Background Abd al-Qadır b. Abdulla (al-Bakrı al-Sadıqi al-Sahfı) al-Sahrawardi was born in Sahraward in 1097 and died in Baghdad in 1167. He was a well-known Islamic scholar and a teacher in the celebrated Madrasa of Nidhamiya. He founded his own madrasa and it became known as Najibiya Madrasa. He was buried in it and the surviving Tomb is all that remains of the original building. not exactly known when the Madrasa was destroyed or demolished but Alusi wrote of it as being a mosque in the early decade of this century. It seems that it was gradually annexed by its adjacent buildings such as the Numaniya Mosque and Sulaimaniya Madrasa during the end of All the available references do not describe the eighteenth century. its former appearance or plan and it is very difficult to give any further details about it. It is of interest to note that Najib is the uncle of Uman al-Sahrawardı whose Tomb and Mosque survıve today in Baghdad.

Architectural Description The Tomb is a simple elevated slab finished in marble and located inside a room (about 4 m. x 5 m.) devoid of any decoration. The room itself is inside the Markaziya Secondary School and almost permanently locked up. Very few people and even very few historians are now aware of the existence of this very important Tomb which serves as a spatial fixation in the historical topography and cartography of Baghdad.

A. 39 ASIFI MOSQUE

Historical Background Originally a building, called Dar al-Quran and belonging to the Mustansırıya Madrasa, was built on the site of this Mosque. Archaeological excavations revealed some of the foundations of this earlier building of which only a superbly decorated iwan survives According to Azzawi, the site was once occupied by a ribat (hospice) called Dar al-Rum built by the Caliph Mustansir (1226-1242). It then became a 'qulundarkhana' (takya) and contained a fine inscription dated 1590 by the famous Baghdadi calligrapher, Qawsi. Massignon, who visited Baghdad in 1907, reported seeing an inscription in Turkish dated 1607, probably the date of the major restoration by Muhammad It was then used as a takya for the 'Mawlawiya Tariga' founded by Rumi the celebrated Turkish Sufi. However, the existing Mosque was built by Daud Pasha in 1825 probably following the general outline of the old building. It is known as Asifi after his title 'Asif al-Dawla'. The Mosque contains a tomb of a person whose identity is disputed by the historians. According to Alusi, the tomb is that of Caliph Mustansir but this is rejected by Jawad. Some say that it is that of Abu al-Harith al-Muhasibi (d. 857), and others suggest that it 1s of Muhammad Alı al-Qulayni (d. 939).

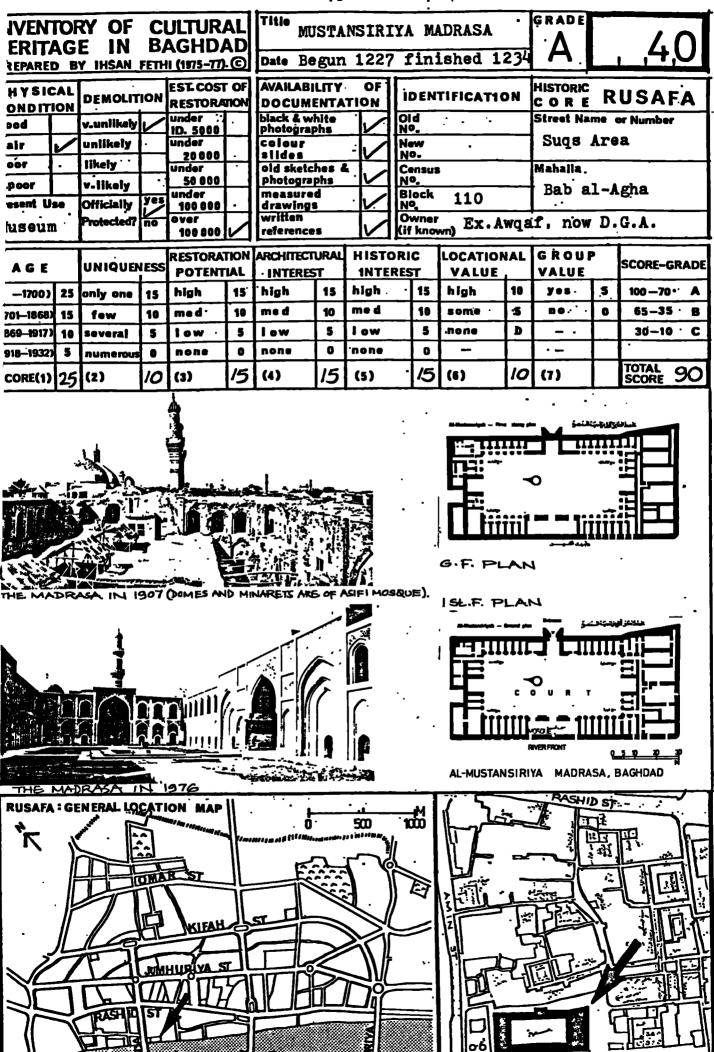

Asifi Mosque used to have two identical minarets but, when one of them collapsed during a storm in 1910, the other was demolished and replaced by a new minaret with two balconies in 1922 by the Awqaf. Recently, the Awqaf unfortunately covered the previously white plastered domes with blue ceramic tiles decorated by a chevron-like pattern. The Mosque is also being given new facades for its northwest and northeast sides and, although the Awqaf may be well intentioned, its actions are tantamount to a defacement of the old fabric.

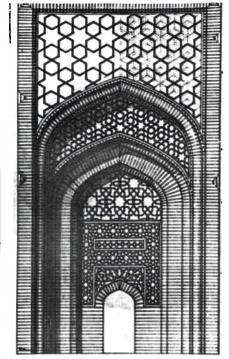

Architectural Description The Mosque occupies a rectangular plot about 28 m. by 50 m. overall. It includes a rectangular musalla, a tomb, and an open planted courtyard. The musalla is about 8 m. by 20 m. and is surmounted by two identical domes of the depressed but slightly pointed type. The domes are supported by the thick walls and by pendentives and separated by a large pointed arch. The mihrab is simple and contains typical kashani tile decoration. A wooden minbar is placed to the right of the mihrab. The musalla qibla wall, which faces the river, is provided by nine windows (in three rows) and these provide ample daylight inside. On the left of the musalla is found the tomb room which is surmounted by its own small pointed dome. The minaret is located at the northeastern corner of the plot. It is about 35 m. in height and is the The lower, middle and upper only one with two balconies in Baghdad. sections of its cylindrical body are decorated in glazed kashani tilework arranged diagonally in Kufic geometric pattern. balcony is corbelled out in three rows of mugarnas while its upper balcony has two. The facias of both balconies are also finished in kashanı work but contain the typical decorative medallions with the names of Allah and Muhammad alternately inscribed in Thulth type. The date of the construction of the minaret is clearly shown on the lower balcony in one of its medallions - 1341 (1922). The minaret is crowned by a fluted cupola and a three-bead metal finial.

A.40 MUSTANSIRIYA MADRASA

Historical Background This magnificent theological college derives its name from its founder, the thirty-seventh Abbasid Caliph Mustansir (1226-1242). The foundations were begun in 1227 and the Madrasa was completed in 1234. Mustansiriya is one of the most important Islamic buildings in Iraq and represents a superb example of Abbasid architecture. It is said that it cost some 700,000 Dinars, a formidable figure at the time. In it were taught the Quran, theology, jurisprudence, literature, medicine and mathematics. Many historians regard it as one of the oldest universities and places of learning in the world. The four Sunni orthodox tariqas, Hanbalı, Shafii, Malıkı and Hanifi, were each allocated its own The Madrasa seems to have survived the destruction of Baghdad by Hulago in 1258 and it is said that Hulago himself used it to assemble the notables of the city for a speech shortly after his capture of the city. During its long history, Mustansiriya suffered a great deal from neglect and misuse. It was once abaondoned, used as a khan, a hospital, army barracks, and lastly as a customs office. However, it underwent a minor restoration during the reign of Sultan Abd al-Aziz in 1865 and its riverfront facade was provided with a new brick inscription frieze. In 1945, the Directorate of Antiquities leased it from the Awgaf and began restoration work on the Madrasa. Recently, the Directorate demolished the surrounding shops and the adjacent Suq (built in 1673 and restored in 1802) in order to reveal its former boundaries.

Architectural Description The building is basically rectangular in plan with a central rectangular open courtyard (Sahn). Its length is 104.80 m.. the width of its northern side is 44.20 m., its southern side 48.80 m. occupies a plot of about 4,836 sq. m. while its roofed area covers some It is built in two storeys with four axial iwans and contains class-rooms, assembly halls, student lodgings, dining rooms, a library, a kitchen, a dispensary, a hammam, a musalla, and many other features. However, not all of these rooms are identifiable today. For example, it is not possible to trace the hammam, kitchen and dispensary but they could have been demolished in the past. The courtyard is 62.40 m. long and 27.40 m. wide taking up an area of about 1,710 sq. m. The front entrance, located in the middle of the northeastern side of the Madrasa, is emphasised by a large portal-frontispiece with fine carved brick inscriptions which fill the whole tympanum of the pointed arch. These inscriptions record the name of the founder and the date of construction. The frontispiece is repeated on the inside but with an enlarged and recessed The four iwans are 6 m. wide, 7.8 m. deep and about arch on either side. 9 m. high, and richly decorated in intricately carved geometric brick All the arches of the building are of the pointed type including The musalla, located on the riverfront 'qıbla' blind recessed ones. wall, has a simple mihrab and is about 8 m. by 23 m. in area. The facade facing the river, arguably the most interesting one of the building, contains one continuous inscription frieze with carved bricks in Thulth type. full text of these inscriptions was studied and recorded by Alusi, Massignon, Jawad, and Awad among several others. Originally, the inscriptions surrounded the whole Madrasa from the outside and the Directorate intends Generally, the restoration of the Directorate has been to restore them. good, but some of the brick decoration, especially in interior facades, has been somewhat conjectural and perhaps 'over restored'. of 'opening up' the Madrasa resulted in the loss of the superb adjacent Suq and its former spatial setting.

A.41 QAPLANI TOMB-MOSQUE

Historical Background Although there is some controversy surrounding the historical origin of this Mosque, most accounts agree that it was probably founded because of the Tomb of a famous person. According to Alusi and others, the Tomb is that of the Hanifite theologian Ahmad al-Qadduri who This is rejected by Jawad and others who suggest that, died in 1036. according to certain historical accounts, the Tomb is that of Ali b. Ahmed al-Alawi al-Zaidi al-Shafii who died in 1180. In his celebrated historical biographical work of Baghdadi personalities, Ibn al-Dubaithi mentioned a small mosque built by Ali in Darb Dinar in the Tuesday Market and that its founder was buried in it and the mosque became a place of pilgrimage. However, this reference is not conclusive because it lacks a more definite location and the identity of the buried must remain open to further The existing Mosque was rebuilt by Qaplan Mustafa Pasha in 1676 and hence its name. Alusi reported seeing many inscriptions in 1903 but none of these exists now. It was restored by Sulaiman Pasha in 1790. Recently, the Awqaf unfortunately demolished its adjacent Suq and parts of the Mosque and rebuilt them both in a new style. This last 'restoration' resulted in almost totally obscuring the Mosque and the Tomb from view. The Tomb is now concealed behind the wall of one of the new shops while the Mosque has been rebuilt, rather strangely, at first floor level. minaret was fortunately left untouched.

Architectural Description The new musalla is a simple rectangular area with a mihrab and is reached by a stairway from the Suq. The minaret, which cannot be easily seen from ground level because it is concealed by the roofs of Suqs, contains one balcony and is finished in glazed kashani tiles. The balcony is corbelled out in two rows of muqarnas and its facia is adorned by kashani medallions with Kufic inscriptions of the words of Allah and Muhammad placed alternately. The lower section of its body is decorated by a diaper-like pattern while its upper section by diagonal patterns in Kufic type. It is crowned by a turquoise fluted cupola and a three-bead metal finial.

A.49 KHAFAFIN MOSQUE

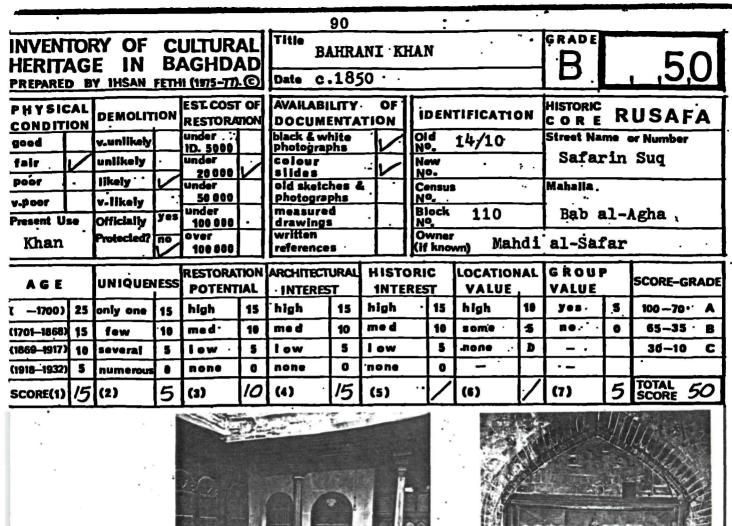

Historical Background This interesting Mosque derives its present name from the fact that it is located in the Khafafin (Sandle-Makers) Sug near Mustansiriya Madrasa. However, it was also known by the names of al-Hadhair (Timber-Yards) and al-Sagha (Goldsmiths). Although its exact date is not recorded on its fabric, many historians believe that it was built by the mother of Caliph Nasir, Zumarrad Khatun in 1202. Its minaret, which is thought to be the oldest in Baghdad, seems to be mostly original but the Mosque itself has undergone several major restorations throughout its history. It was restored during the reign of Sulaiman Pasha by Abu Bakir al-Pachachi in 1790 and this explains the resemblance of its elaborate entrance facade to that of Sulaimaniya Madrasa (No. 30). According to Azzawi, the cupola and balcony of this most historic minaret were replaced by the Awqaf in 1948. has discovered that the decorative band just below the cupola (see middle plate in card) is now different to the one before as seen from old This is only one small but important detail which photographs. illustrates how the historic authenticity of buildings is lost by ill-advised restoration work.

Architectural Description The Mosque is entered from the Suq through a small cafe and this makes it difficult for the casual pedestrian to notice The front facade is very richly decorated in carved brickwork and consists of a central pointed arch with one window on either side. arch has spiral borders and it is recessed by two rows of brick mugarnas which are also present in the side windows. Its tympanum, or the triangular area between the mugarnas work and the segmental arch of the door fanlight, is filled with glazed and inscribed kashani tiles which indicate the date of a restoration (AH 1234?/1818). Between the two spiral pilasters, which frame the central arch, is an inverted U-shaped inscription band in superb Thulth type. The Mosque occupies a roughly rectangular plot of about 33 m. by 40 m. in dimensions including an open planted courtyard. The Mosque consists of a square musalla and a free-standing outside minaret. The musalla is about 20 m. by 20 m. overall (including thickness of walls) and is divided into two aisles by thick, low, rectangular piers. Each aisle is surmounted by three shallow domes on triangular cross-ribbed pendentives. The mihrab is situated in the middle of the qibla wall and is framed by a band of glazed kashani tiles inscribed with Quranic quotations. To the right of the mihrab is located a brick minbar. The portico is a recent addition or replacement by the Awqaf. All seven domes are finished with a layer of earth mixed with straw (libin) on the outside, and so also is the roof. The minaret, which is about 20 m. in height, is located at the corner of the northern side of the musalla. It consists of an octagonal base, a cylindrical body, and a balcony. Unlike modern minarets, it is largely plain and only some of its upper parts are ornamented with mosaic work. Its round balcony is adorned with a diaper-like pattern in turquoise mosaic. It rests on two rows of corbelled mugarnas in plain brickwork. The minaret is crowned by an unfluted cupola and a four-bead metal finial. The cupola is decorated by a polygonal pattern of mosaic work.

B. 50 BAHRANI KHAN

Historical Background This small but interesting building was probably built around the middle of the nineteenth century. This date is indicated by its architectural treatment and overall detailing. Because most traditional houses in this area are now being used as khans it is often difficult to ascertain whether they were originally built to be used as houses or khans. However, 'proper' khans, especially town ones, are relatively rare and their internal planning shows some definite characteristics that are quite different from those of houses. Bahrani Khan was originally built as a house but it is now used as a khan for storing textiles and other similar goods. The building has several distinguished qualities and is worthy of protection and documentation.

Architectural Description The external facade of the building which roughly faces west, is somewhat obscured by shops' awnings but it consists of an interesting portal and a shanashil window. The front rooms of the ground floor have been converted into shops similar to most other buildings in Safarin Sug (Coppersmiths). The portal consists of a pointed brick arch with its spandrels decorated in a geometric pattern of brick mosaic and its tympanum in a parquet-like (Hasiri) pattern. The main door is made of hard-wood boards and ornamented with brass knobs and two knockers. This particular style of studded doors is becoming increasingly rare in The interior of the building is arranged around an open court-Baghdad. The ground floor consists of an L-shaped entrance corridor, two colonnaded talars, two vaulted neem cellars, and several small rooms. The upper storey includes two colonnaded tarmas, an ursi room, a shanashil room and several other rooms. The capitals of the wooden columns are not mugarnased but are simply constructed. window, which faces north-west, consists of seven modular sash windows with semi-circular fanlights and plain glass. Its base is ornamented with a radiating-lozenge motif often found in Baghdadi houses. doors and windows have semi-circular fanlights, some with vertical iron The balustrade, which surrounds three sides of the courtyard, is made of wooden posts and vertical wrought-iron bars. All the ceilings of the upper storey are panelled in a concentric-lozenge pattern adorned by central medallions of mirror mosaic. The roof opening over the courtyard is framed by a curved wooden cornice, now badly damaged, and crested with sachagh.

B. 58 DALA KHAN

Historical Background This building is one of the few that were originally built as khans and not converted from houses. According to Durubi, it was built by Abd al-Qadir Dala b. Ismael Dala in 1904. However, this date is probably that of a renovation and not of the building. Durubi mentions that its site was originally occupied by Khan al-Harir (Khan of Silk) built by Amin Afandi the Kahya (around the second decade of the eighteenth century). During the British occupation of the city it was used as a police garrison and prison. It is still one of the most important and distinguished khans in Rusafa and is worthy of special protection and full documentation.

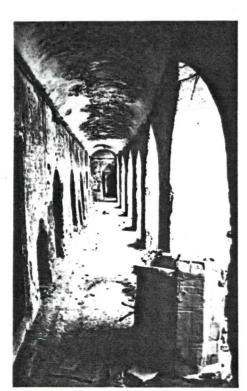

Architectural Description Externally, the khan does not have an elevation as such because it is entirely surrounded by shops on all sides. shops were probably built with the khan to provide much sought-after commercial space in the central sugs area of Baghdad. interesting external feature is the portal. It consists of a brick pointed arch with its spandrels and tympanum decorated in a geometric pattern The khan occupies a roughly rectangular plot about of brick mosaic. 40 m. by 45 m. overall including an open courtyard about 15 m. by 20 m. Most of the courtyard was unfortunately covered by a modern two-storey building in 1960. The plan of the khan is a typical peristyle. floor rooms are arranged around the courtyard while upper floor rooms are arranged around a continuous arcaded gallery (tarma). arches are semi-circular in shape and rest on round brick columns with simplified capitals. The roofing system used involves domes and vaults. The tarma is barrel vaulted but the north-western part of the building, which extends over the Suq al-Jayıf, contains very interesting brick shallow domes on triangular cross-ribbed pendentives and on pointed arches. domes are provided with small oculi to allow daylight. Another interesting feature in this part of the building is the grated floor of its corridor. All the windows and door openings in the khan are pointed arches. balustrade which surrounds the first floor tarma is made of simple vertical wrought-iron bars. There is no cornice which frames the roof opening over the courtyard. The floors are finished with brick 'farshi' tiles.

SECTION. KHAN AL-ZURUR

A. 59 ZURUR KHAN

Historical Background This interesting Khan was founded by Sultan Salim in 1534 as shown in the partly-surviving original inscriptions on its north-eastern portal. The complete text and layout of these inscriptions were fortunately copied by Herzfeld in 1911 (see card). Its name suggests that it was associated with the manufacture of buttons or with the minting of coins. This Khan is one of the few surviving town-khans in Baghdad and the only one of its type from this period. Therefore, it deserves to be carefully protected against misuse or destruction. However, its ground floor and its open courtyard are now completely taken over by shops and stores, and it is in such a bad physical condition that it may soon collapse. Immediate protective steps should be taken by the Directorate of Antiquities to save this very important building.

Architectural Description Zurur Khan is a peristyle building about 40 m. by 40 m. overall including an open courtyard of about 20 m. by It is built of brick and in two identical floors each containing some thirty rooms. Side rooms are rectangular in shape measuring some 3 m. wide, 6.5 m. long and 3.4 m. high, while corner rooms are rhomb-shaped. The upper storey, which is reached by means of two stairways located at the south-western side of the Khan, contains a continuous arcaded corridor for circulation. It is about 1.8 m. wide. and its roof is vaulted. Each side room is provided with an open hearth on its corridor wall and a chimney. It is not known what the original purpose of these hearths was but it is possible that they were used for melting metals or alloys associated with coin manufacture. a marked absence of decoration in the building which gives it an austere and utilitarian character. Further research could reveal interesting facts about its history and former appearance.

C.60 ZNAD CAFE

Historical Background Cafes (singular Qahwa, plural Maqahi) are the Near-Eastern equivalent of the Western coffee-houses. exclusive to males and represent an important element in the urban life of society. It is here that men spend most of their evenings discussing social events, politics and gossip, playing backgammon, or just killing their time. The Qahwa has been overlooked by most urban historians and other scholars, both Western and Eastern. Baghdad used to have hundreds of cafes and many played an important role in political events. Very few old cafes survive today and the overwhelming majority have been either demolished or considerably modified. Architecturally, they were often simply designed and built as a shaded area with seats for customers. However, those which were built on the river bank had more elaborate structures. Buckingham, who visited Baghdad in the seventeenth century, was impressed by these cafes and produced an interesting engraving of one of them (see card). A typical feature of riverfront cafes was their cantilevered section over the river. The cantilevers. which were supported on thick brick wall, formed a continuous line of verandahs which characterised Baghdad's river banks, especially in Karkh. Although Znad cafe is a modern version of earlier cafes, it is, nevertheless, worthy of protection because it retains some of their old character.

Architectural Description The cafe occupies the ground floor of a two-storey building. It is about 18 m. wide and 30 m. long and of jack-arch construction. The upper storey, constructed in a timber frame with a brick infill, contains an arcaded wooden verandah overlooking the river. The cafe itself is projected about 1 m. over the river and its riverfront side is not arcaded but provided with windows. However, the cafe may have had a verandah in the past but later it was replaced by modern windows. Inside, the cafe contains numerous long wooden seats called 'takhts' and simple tables. The original furniture and the tea-making samovars have probably been sold to collectors or simply replaced.

B. 62 PASHA KABIR KHAN

Historical Background According to the present manager of this interesting Khan, it was built by Daud Pasha around 1818 and hence its name. However, Durubi states that the Khan was originally called 'Khan Kubba al-Kabir' but was bought by Daud Pasha and made waqf to Haidarkhana Mosque. Indeed, its architectural style and detailing show remarkable similarities to those of Zurur Khan which is known to have been built in 1534. It is quite possible that this Khan belongs to the sixteenth century but only further historical research and site investigation could solve this question. It is one of the few surviving town khans in Baghdad and therefore deserves special protection and full documentation.

Architectural Description Originally the Khan was about 40 m. by 40 m. in dimensions but when the new Sumawaal Street was driven through in the early 1930's it lost about 10 m. from its south-eastern side. almost entirely hidden behind shops and multi-storey office blocks. peristyle khan consists basically of an open courtyard about 10 m. by 20 m. and numerous rooms arranged around it. The upper-storey rooms are directly reached from a continuous arcaded tarma. The brick arches of the tarma are of the notched segmental type which is a common feature in many traditional Baghdadi buildings. The arches of the windows and the doors on both floors are pointed. Corner rooms are set at an angle of forty-five degrees to the tarma which is akin to Zurur Khan (No. 59). The tarma is barrel vaulted and is surrounded by a simple wrought-iron Internal doors are wooden and studded with big iron nails. In 1955 the extensive underground cellars of this khan were filled with earth and rubble because they collected seeping water from nearby buildings and also from the river. This is unfortunate because the underground sirdabs were probably interestingly vaulted and domed. The floors are finished with brick farshi tiles while the walls are simply plastered with juss. The courtyard contains a superb 'Nabqa' tree which, according to some of the locals, is more than 100 years old.

A.65 MIRJAN KHAN

Historical Background This Khan is the most outstanding in Iraq and certainly one of the most important in Islam. The superb and in many ways unique building was founded in 1359 by Amin al-Din Mirjan, the Governor of Baghdad during the Jalairid period. It was made waqf (bequeathed) to the nearby Mirjaniya Madrasa as shown on its fine carved brick inscriptions. It continued to be used as a khan during the Ottoman period and became known as Ortuma (the covered) Khan. Its physical condition was seriously neglected and by 1935 the Awgaf wanted to convert it into shops or a hotel. Fortunately, this project was strongly opposed by the Directorate of Antiquities which then Since then, the Khan has succeeded in appropriating it in 1936. undergone several restorations and consolidations especially against Several unsuccessful attempts were made to stop water rising damp. from seeping into the low Khan from the surrounding area. Recently, the problem was effectively tackled by a comprehensive scheme for water-proofing the floor and the walls and for the catchment of any seeping water by means of canalisation system. The Khan was used as a museum for Islamic Antiquities but there is a proposal for using it as a restaurant for tourists.

Architectural Description The Khan is basically rectangular in plan and about 22 m. in width and 41.50 m. in length. It is built entirely of brick, in two floors, and as a covered peristyle - a unique structure Its original entrance was from the north-western side facing al-Aridh Suq but, because of the difference between the level of the Khan and the Sug, another entrance at its south-eastern side was provided in 1936. The ground floor consists of twenty-two rooms These rooms are directly entered from its and several shops. covered courtyard and served as stores for merchants and traders. They contain only one, small, rectangular window placed above their pointed-arch door openings. The courtyard is 11.40 m. wide and 30.25 m. long and was used as the main area for trading and displaying goods. The first floor contains some twenty-three rooms all accessible from a continuous balcony, which is corbelled about 1.20 m. over the courtyard by brick brackets, and is about 6 m. above ground floor level. The vaulted roof is perhaps its most interesting architectural feature. Basically, the roof, which covers only the courtyard area, consists of eight thick pointed arches rising to an apex of about 14 m. above ground floor level and interspaced by dormer-like windows. The space between the arches is not spanned by the normal vaults but by vertical and horizontal brick planes. The vertical walls are used to place the windows in two rows. These roof windows make a very interesting sculptural feature but unfortunately cannot be easily seen from street level. Externally, the Khan may have had inscribed bands around its main walls but these were probably destroyed when new shops were built around it. These shops and the roof of the adjacent Sug al-Aridh conceal the main facade of the Khan and only its inscribed portal can be seen from street The new facade on Sumawal Street is largely conjectural. This facade, which is 41.56 m. long and 7.80 m. high, has been restored several times by the Antiquities.

A. 67 ADILIYA AL-KABIR MOSQUE

Historical Background According to Alusi, this Mosque was built in 1755 by Adila, the daughter of Ahmad Pasha and the wife of Sulaiman Pasha the Great. This date was inscribed on its original portal which was replaced by a later restoration. The Mosque was restored several times and its existing minaret shows a date of one restoration in 1814. It underwent another major restoration in 1948 but this time by a Christian who had made an agreement with the Awqaf that he would be given a plot behind the Mosque if he carried out the restoration.

Architectural Description The Mosque occupies a plot of about 30 m. by 38 m. overall including an open courtyard 8 m. wide and 26 m. long. Externally, the Mosque is distinctly modern in appearance. Its facade consists of a high crenellated wall with six large windows, grouped in threes, with circular fanlights. The whole facade is framed by one continuous band of glazed kashani tiles inscribed with Quranic quotations in Thulth type. The portal is simple and compares very poorly with the original. The musalla is rectangular in shape and is surmounted by six depressed domes and contains a very interesting marble mihrab dated 1755 and a marble minbar on its right. The mihrab is decorated with Quranic inscriptions in Thulth type. entrance corridor is also surmounted by a depressed dome. domes are finished with a layer of earth and not glazed. A room situated on the south-eastern corner contains nine graves. The minaret is located near the entrance corridor and consists of one balcony. It is finished in glazed kashani tiles and its balcony is corbelled out in two rows of mugarnas work. The minaret is crowned by a fluted cupola and a four-bead metal finial.

THE MOSQUE FROM A NEARBY ROOF

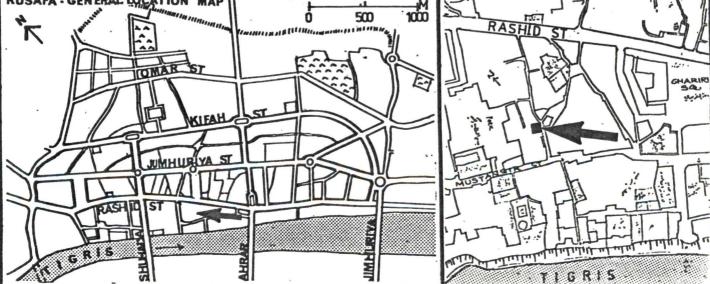

A.69 IHSAI MOSQUE/TAKYA KHALIDIYA

Historical Background This small but interesting Mosque was probably rebuilt by a notable theologian, Shaikh Muhammad b. Ahmad al-Ihsai al-Hanafi around 1660. It is probable that Ihsai rebuilt it on the site of an older mosque and thus it became known by his name. He died in 1672 and his grave survives today (Massignon, who visited Baghdad in 1907, reported mistakenly that Ihsai died in 1788). The Mosque was restored by Khalid al-Naqshabandi in 1815 and it became known by his name. It was also restored in 1846 by Muhammad Najib Pasha, and by the Awqaf during the 1940's. The Mosque lies partly concealed behind the shops of Mustansir Street and is therefore not known or seen by many people.

Architectural Description The Mosque, which is situated on the Tigris, is about 18 m. wide and 35 m. long, including a 10 m. by 10 m. planted open courtyard. Externally, it does not have any significant facade. Internally, it contains a wooden portico and a small musalla. The musalla contains a very simple mihrab and is surmounted by a 10-metre diametre depressed dome on triangular pendentives. A small room with a door on the courtyard contains the grave of Ihsai. The dome is not finished in glazed tiles but simply self-finished in pointed brickwork. The overall character of this Mosque is somewhat puritanical and austere which gives it an 'authentic' atmosphere. The interior needs careful restoration and documentation.

THE MINARET

A.71 KHASAKI MOSQUE

Historical Background According to Alusi, this interesting Mosque was first built by Muhammad Pasha al-Khasaki between 1656 and 1658. According to Coke, it was converted from an earlier church in 1682 but this is rejected by Jawad. However, it is probable that it was built on the side of an earlier mosque because of the existence today of the tomb of Shaikh Muhammad al-Azhari. According to Durubi, Bandanigi mentioned that Azharı's father was a companion of Abd al-Qadir al-Gailani (d. 1165). Ibrahim Pasha completed some of its features in 1666, and in 1682 Muhammad Beg provided it with several golden inscription bands. It was restored in 1891 and again in 1924. This Mosque is famous for its former marble mihrab which Herzfeld and Creswell believed to be that of Mansur's Mosque in the Round City of Baghdad. The mihrab, now kept at the Iraqi Museum, is carved out of a single piece of white marble and has floral decorations with spiral fluted shafts. The last restoration of the Mosque took place in 1942.

Architectural Description The Mosque is built on an irregularly-shaped plot about 27 m. at its widest and 40 m. at its longest. From the outside only the decorated portal and the minaret can be seen. The portal consists of a pointed arch with spiral flutings on its edges and recessed mugarnas-The interior courtyard contains several mature palm-trees and annex rooms. The Mosque proper consists of a rectangular musalla, a portico with a summer mihrab, and a tomb room. The musalla is about 10 m. wide and 15 m. long and was surmounted by a large depressed dome on pendentives but the roof has been rebuilt flat by the Awqaf. minaret is located at the extreme southern corner of the Mosque facing the small saha (square) opposite. It consists of one balcony and a cylindrical body. The balcony is corbelled out in two rows of mugarnas and adorned by typical kashani medallions. Its lower and upper sections are also finished in coloured kashani glazed tiles in Kufic-like (Aliyat) pattern. It is crowned by a fluted cupola and a three-bead metal finial.

B.73 RIVERFRONT HOUSE 8/38 RAS QARYA

Historical Background Built probably around 1910, this large house which overlooks the Tigris is one of the most distinguished in Baghdad. Its size and richness of detailing suggest that it was probably built by an important local personality or a Turkish Governor. Some aged locals in the area claim that it belonged to a Turkish Wali but this question needs further research. A photograph taken in 1918 was traced by the author. It shows the same building used by the British as the 'Local Resources Billet'. It is now regrettably used as a shoe factory which employs over 40 workers and uses a number of heavy machines and equipment. This unsuitable use has had a destructive effect on its fragile fabric and should be stopped as soon as possible. Full protective measures and documentation are also urgently needed.

Architectural Description Basically, the house is L-shaped in plan with an internal courtyard. Its two main sides, northeastern which faces the narrow street and the southwestern which faces the river, probably have the most interesting facades in the city. The street facade is truly impressive and its nearly 30 m. long shanashil window at first floor level is the longest in Baghdad. The shanashil is subdivided into 34 modular sash windows with semicircular fanlights. There are also two kabishkan shanashils at mezzanine level which help break the long sweep of the window. The modular windows are ornamented by a simple Y-shaped motif and protected by vertical iron bars. The use of the jack-arch system suggests that either the house was modified around 1920 or was in fact built around 1917 when the system was first introduced. The riverfront is cantilevered about 1.20 m. over the river and consists of a continuous verandah at ground floor level and modular sash windows with two verandahs at first floor level. The first floor verandahs are projected a further 1 m. by jack-arching. The underside of the kabishkan shanashil windows and of the two first floor verandahs are panelled in a concentric-lozenge pattern of wood. Ground floor rooms facing the river have large segmental arch door openings and are protected by vertical wrought-iron bars. The shanashils on both storeys are painted red while modular sash windows are painted white. The portal, which is somewhat small in relation to the imposing size of the house, consists of a brick pointed arch with its spandrels decorated in a geometric pattern of brick mosaic. The L-shaped entrance has a superbly mugarnased ceiling and leads directly to the courtyard. Because the courtyard is now covered by a modern roof, the interior was too dark to investigate properly. Besides, it was crowded with people and equipment. However, the interior is typical of traditional houses in Baghdad. The brickwork is particularly good. Internal doors have semicircular fanlights and are protected with iron bars. The ceilings of all rooms and the tarma are panelled in a concentric-lozenge pattern of wood and adorned with central medallions. The roof opening over the courtyard and the building on the outside are framed by a curved wooden cornice crested with sachagh.

A.76 BUTRUS KAKA HOUSE

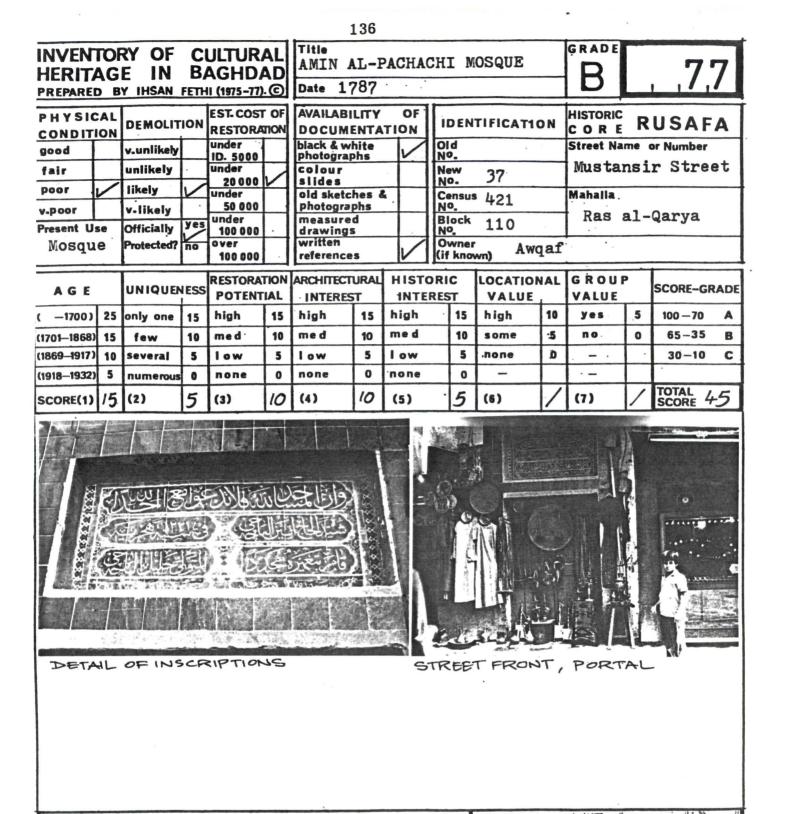

Historical Background Architecturally, this house is one of the most interesting in Baghdad. Its construction and detailing show that it was probably built around 1900. Some of its parts are roofed by jack-arching which suggests a later modification. It was not possible to trace the original owner of this house but it must have been one with considerable means. According to some aged locals, it was once used as the headquarters for the Iraqi Watani Party. It is now partly used as a workshop for the manufacture of knitwear and partly for residence. Although it scored only sixty-five points, it was decided to grade as A because of its outstanding qualities.

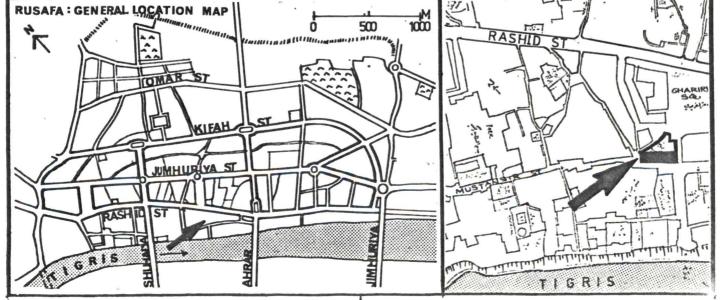

Architectural Description The house is roughly 20 m. wide and 28 m. Its street facade, which faces south-west, consists of two shanashil windows and a large verandah between them. The verandah is projected almost 2 m. over the street and contains five wooden columns with simple and not mugarnased capitals. Both the ceiling and the underside of the floor of the verandah are finished in teak wood arranged in concentric-diamonds pattern and adorned at the middle by mirror-mosaic medallions. The shanashils project about 1 m. and each is supported by six stepped brakeets which are in fact the ends of Their modular windows have segmental fanlights and are protected by iron bars and wooden 'geem' shutters. The portal consists of a segmental arch with geometric brick-mosaic in its tympanum and The large double entrance door is ornamented with typical spandrels. Baghdadı wooden mouldings. Inside, the house contains an open courtyard about 10 m. by 12 m. in dimensions, a vaulted neem cellar, and several rooms arranged around the courtyard. Its bent entrance passage is vaulted. The upper storey possesses some of the finest decorated ceilings in Baghdad. The continuous balustraded balcony leads to all rooms. All the rooms which face the street and two other rooms located on the southeastern side are provided with 'khurdakar' ceilings. The room located at the extreme southern corner of the house contains a teak ceiling of about 4 m. by 9 m. and Immediate protective steps are needed to save this unique house from destruction. Already, according to the resident owner of the workshop, there have been several attempts by some collectors in Baghdad to buy these ceilings at a high price. The owner has so far refused but he may soon succumb to their insistent pressures and attractions. also a real need to document the house and especially its ceilings. Further research into its history may reveal interesting facts about its former owner and life.

A. 78 HAIDAR HAMMAM

Historical Background Although its date is not mentioned on its fabric, Durubi has managed to locate its waqfiya which states that it was built by Haidar Chalabi al-Shabandar in 1650. Because its waqf was of the hereditary type, its ownership was dissolved in 1955 and since then its fabric has been considerably damaged by inappropriate uses including the present clothing workshop. This hammam was officially designated for compulsory purchase by the committee set up in 1973 to consider the protection of buildings of outstanding architectural or historical qualities in Baghdad. Originally, the Hammam had two separate sections, one for men and the other for women. Only the men's section remains today.

Architectural Description Externally, nothing remains of its original 26-metre long frontage. It has been taken over by shops on the commercially attractive Musatansir Street. A small door leads to the disrobing room now used as a shop. The room is rectangular, about 6 m. wide and 10 m. long, and surmounted by three shallow domes on squinches with oculi at their apex. From the disrobing room seven steps lead down to the intermediate room which is about 3 m. wide and 24.5 m. long. It is divided into six rooms, four of which are domed while the others are vaulted. The hot room consists of a central area surmounted by a dome 6 m. in diameter, and four axial awans each 3 m. wide and 4 m. long. The iwans are vaulted and also have oculi for A squarish room is located at the eastern corner of the hot room and may have acted as a private room. All the inside walls of the hammam are plastered in white while the roof is finished with a The roof is reached by means of a narrow stairway layer of earth. located off the disrobing room. Generally, the hammam is arguably one of the most interesting in the city and its partial loss is very unfortunate. No records or old photographs were located to describe its former women's section.

A. 80 OLD RIVERFRONT WALL OF BAGHDAD

Historical Background Abbasid and Medieval Baghdad had a defensive wall around it including its riverfront. According to Dr. Isa Salman, the Directorate of Antiquities's excavations along the riverfront of Mustansiriya Madrasa resulted in the discovery of parts of this Abbasid wall. Dr. Salman seems to be confident that the lower parts of this wall are indeed of Abbasid origin and, if his proposition is true, this discovery is of tremendous archaeological and historical The wall of the eastern side of Baghdad was built by either Mustarshid or Mustadhhir around 1095. Ibn al-Jawzı mentions the existence of this wall in his book 'Managib Baghdad' and states that it was partially destroyed by the floods of 1159 during the reign of Muqtadır who then built an embankment along the wall for protection. However, this discovery must be further investigated and researched and it is tentatively graded as A here pending future developments. It should also be mentioned that if the proposed corniche road is implemented by Amanat al-Assima this wall would be destroyed.

B. 81 LYNCH HOUSE

Historical Background The Lynch Brothers, Thomas Kerr Lynch (d. 1891) and Captain H. Blosse Lynch, both served in the famous second Euphrates Survey Expedition which was organised by the British. According to Budge, Thomas Lynch set up his own business in Baghdad and offered the Ottoman Wali to bear all the expenses of replacing the East India Company's steamers on the Tigris with specially constructed merchant ones. business was established in 1841 under a Turkish Firman and became so very successful that it soon began to irritate the Turks who, in order to undermine it, bought two steamers from England and set up their own The original offices of the Lynch's business, called the Mesopotamia Persia Corporation, were reported by the Turkish authorities to be structurally unsound and were therefore demolished. The present Lynch House was probably built around 1912. It is of architectural and local historical interest but has been considerably modified, especially its interior.

Architectural Description The House occupies a roughly rectangular plot about 50 m. by 70 m. situated between the two main streets of Rashid and Mustansir. Aerial photographs taken during the early decades of this century show that the House contained a large internal courtyard. The courtyard is now totally built up and occupied by numerous shops. Externally, the building is clearly expressed in two floors. The northeastern facade, which faces Rashid Street, is divided into twelve bays which consist of an arcaded walkway for pedestrians on ground level and arched windows on first floor level. The arches of the walkway are round and rest on thick brick piers. It is probable that this colonnade may have been the reason for the rest of the buildings on Rashid Street to follow its example and give the street its unique colonnaded pavements. The upper storey facade generally echoes the lower one but most of the original windows have been replaced by cheap modern iron ones. The south-west facade, which faces Mustansir Street, was the main one because it originally contained the main entrance and portal. Unfortunately, this facade has now been much altered by shops and offices and only the upper part of the facade remains authentic. The arches of this facade as well as those of the side ones are pointed. The whole building is framed at the top ,by a superb muqarnas-like cornice. The building is very likely to be demolished and replaced by a more profitable high-rise block. It deserves to be restored to its original form and protected against misuse.

A.85 SASSON HOUSE

A.86 ANNEX

Historical Background This large house is certainly one of the most outstanding in Baghdad. Its name suggests that it once belonged to, or was built by, the well-known Jewish family of Sir Sasson Hiskail who was a Minister of Finance during the 1930's. Its construction and detailing show that it was probably built around 1900 or slightly earlier. It is now owned by the government 'Mujamada' Department and is being sub-let to students for lodgings. It has seriously deteriorated through neglect and needs urgent protective action. Fortunately, the committee which was set up in 1973 to protect buildings of outstanding qualities in Baghdad decided to purchase it but nothing has been done since then. Although it scored only 65 points it was decided to grade it as A because of its exceptional qualities.

Architectural Description Externally, its frontage consists of several shops and only a small but impressive portal indicates its existence to the Its riverfront facade is somewhat concealed by shrubs and consists of several rectangular windows and a recessed iwan. iwan serves as an entrance for the outside terrace at first floor level. The wooden cornice which must have framed the building is now missing. The house is about 30 m. wide and 40 m. long and designed as a complete The ground floor includes an open courtyard, three colonnaded talars, and a neem cellar. The courtyard, which is about 12 m. by 12 m.. is finished in Farshi tiles and originally contained a fountain in the middle. The upper storey has a continuous colonnaded tarma and some thirteen The tarma contains twenty somewhat slender wooden columns of muqarnased capitals. The southeastern side of the tarma contains a simple ursi of six windows, while the ursi at the northwestern side is very richly It is 6 m. long and consists of seven modular windows intricately screened in geometric patterns. The ceilings of the tarma and the rooms are finished in wood and decorated in a concentric diamond The central room, which overlooks the river, is panelled in wood arranged in a herring-bone fashion below a superbly muqarnased cornice. Doors and windows have semi-circular fanlights and are protected with There is a room annex in the garden which probably wrought-iron bars. served as a special guest-room. It has been listed on its own (No. 86) because of the danger of its demolition. It has a richly decorated ceiling and is uniquely impressive.

References Measured Drawings are found at the Architectural School, Baghdad University. They are drawn by a student and show some inconsistencies with the existing house.

B. 101 IBRAHIM AL-PACHACHI HOUSE

Historical Background This large and interesting house, which was probably built around 1880 or slightly earlier, is one of the few which survive in Sabunchiya area. Its importance is mainly architectural but it is being gradually damaged by the numerous carpenters who are using it at present.

Architectural Description The house is situated on a corner site in Sug al-Sabunchiya and therefore has two facades. The south-east facade consists of two shanashil windows separated by a wall with three round arch windows. The projecting shanashils are supported on the stepped ends of timber joists and each consists of four modular sash windows. The south-west facade, which is the main one because it contains the portal, consists of two large shanashils and one small kabishkan shanashil at mezzanine level. Each of the large shanashils consist of five modular sash windows, all of which have semi-circular fanlights and are protected by vertical iron bars. The fanlights are decorated by a XX-like motif. The elaborate portal consists of a pointed arch whose spandrels and tympanum are decorated in a polygonal pattern of The rectangular door is decorated with typical carved brick mosaic. mouldings and adorned with brass studs and two knockers. The house occupies a rectangular area about 14 m. by 18 m. including an internal The bent entrance corridor leads to the courtyard which is about 4 m. by 6 m. The ground floor includes a colonnaded talar, a very interesting neem cellar, and several other rooms. All ground floor rooms and windows have segmental arch fanlights or heads. The neem cellar has a superbly vaulted and domed ceiling. The domes are shallow and rest on pointed arches and on triangular cross-ribbed pendentives. They are decorated with a polygonal pattern of brick mosaic. storey includes three shanashil rooms with ursi windows, a colonnaded tarma, and kabishkan rooms at mezzanine level. The balustrade, which surrounds the tarma on three sides, is corbelled out in saw-tooth brickwork which also helps frame the courtyard at first floor level. Openings and doors of the upper storey have pointed arch fanlights. The ceilings are all panelled with a concentric-lozenge pattern and adorned by a central medallion of mirror-mosaic. The roof opening over the courtyard is framed by a curved wooden cornice crested with sachagh.

NEW MINARET.

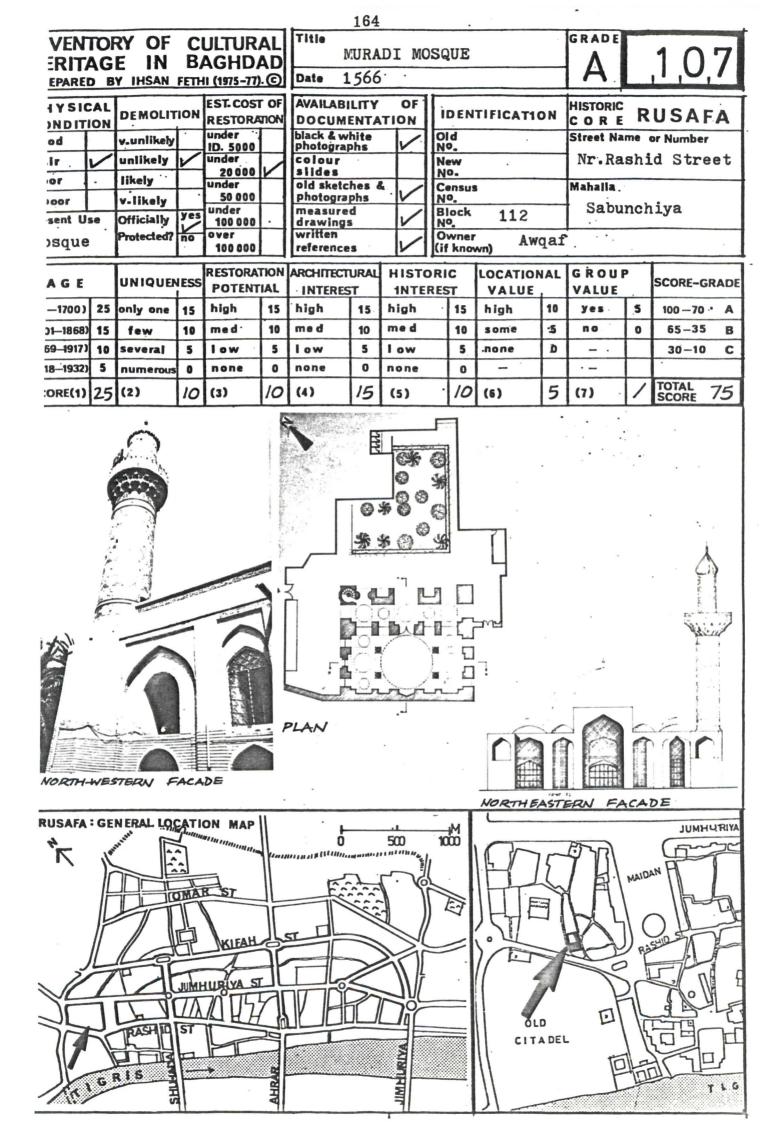

B. 106 ALI AFANDI MOSQUE

Historical Background According to Alusi, this Mosque was built in 1711 by Ali Afandi the Treasurer (Daftarder) of Baghdad. It was mostly demolished in 1954 when the new Jumhouriya Street was driven through its area. The original Mosque consisted of a domed musalla, an arcaded portico, aminaret and an open courtyard. The two large domes which surmounted the musalla were of the pointed type and externally rendered white but not glazed. The minaret consisted of a cylindrical body and one round balcony. The balcony was corbelled out in two rows of large muqarnas. The upper section was crowned by an unfluted cupola and a two-bead finial. The minaret was decorated with a fine pattern of glazed kashani tiles. The new Mosque was built by the Awqaf in 1963 on the remainder of the original site but in a totally different style.

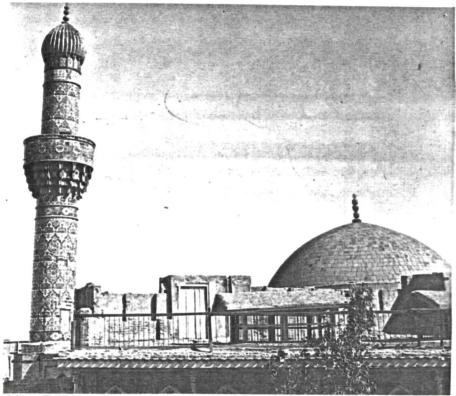

Architectural Description The new building occupies a roughly rectangular plot about 20 m. by 27 m. overall. It consists of an open courtyard, a musalla, a minaret and service rooms. The musalla is about 12 m. by 22 m., its mihrab simple and located on the south-western side, and its roof is flat and constructed in reinforced concrete. minaret is located at the extreme northern corner of the open courtyard and overlooks Jumhouriya Street. It consists of a square base and a cylindrical body with a round balcony. The balcony is corbelled out in two rows of elaborate mugarnas and its parapet adorned with eight-pointed star medallions inscribed alternately with the words 'Allah' and 'Muhammad' in Thulth type. The whole body is finished with a geometrical pattern of The upper section is crowned by a turquoise fluted blue kashanı tıles. cupola and a beaded finial. Further research could reveal more old photographs or a measured plan of the original Mosque.

A.107 MURADI MOSQUE

Historical Background According to Felix Jones, this Mosque was built in 1465, but Alusi states that it was built in 1570. Jawad believed that it was built in 1566 and its site was occupied by the Abbasid Sharabiya Madrasa. It owes its present name to Murad Pasha, the Wali of Baghdad between 1561 and 1566. It was restored in 1901-1903 and in the early 1970's by the Awqaf. Since the early 1950's, the Mosque has been visually damaged and largely concealed by a three-storey building built ironically by the Awqaf.

Architectural Description The Mosque occupies an irregularly-shaped plot and consists of a rectangular musalla, a portico, a planted courtyard, The musalla is about 10 m. wide and 18 m. and a recently built hall. long and is built in three aisles the middle one of which is surmounted by a large depressed dome while the others have shallow domes on pendentives. The musalla obtains daylight by six pointed-arch windows The portico and the portal are also surmounted by on either side. shallow domes. All domes are simply finished in plain tiles. elaborate minaret is one of the most interesting in Baghdad. located at the northern corner of the portico and consists of a cylindrical body and a superb balcony. The balcony is corbelled out in four rows of muqarnas work which is rare in Baghdad. Its facia as well as the whole body of the minaret is finished in square glazed kashani tiles with lozenge-shaped floral patterns in several subtle colours. This floral pattern is another rare feature of this minaret. The upper section is crowned by a fluted cupola and a three-bead metal finial. Just below the cupola there is a band of Quranic inscriptions in Thulth type.

A.119 HAIDAR-KHANA MOSQUE

Historical Background. The inscriptions on this outstanding and large Mosque state that it was founded by the last Mamluk Wali Daud Pasha in 1817 and completed in 1827. However, according to Jawad, it was rebuilt in place of an older one. Its name suggests that the original mosque was probably built by Haidar al-Chalabi al-Shabandar who is known to have built the partly-surviving Haidar Hammam in 1650 and was the contemporary of Khasaki (1656-1658). It is certain that Haidarkhana Mosque is almost a replica of Ahmadiya Mosque in Baghdad (built in 1796). The Mosque was restored in 1849 and several times during the last two decades. It is probably the best specimen of Baghdadi mosques of the nineteenth century.

Architectural Description The Mosque is built on an irregularly-shaped plot of about 35 m. by 60 m. overall. It consists of a large open courtyard, a portico, and a rectangular musalla. The Mosque building proper is some 20 m. wide and 27 m. long. The portico, located at the northeastern side, is 4 m. wide and 22 m. long and is surmounted by five shallow domes on pendentives. The musalla is 10 m. wide and 22 m. long and is divided into three aisles by four thick piers. The central aisle, which includes the mihrab and the marble minbar, is surmounted by a large pointed dome on a drum with several pointed arch windows. The lateral domes which surmount the side aisles are much smaller in size and without windows. The main dome and two side ones are finished in glazed kashani tiles with superb Arabesque floral patterns in turquoise and yellow colours. joint between the main dome and the upper part of the drum is enhanced by a continuous inscription band in Thulth type. The minaret, which is located at the extreme northern corner of the portico, is about 33 m. high and consists of an octagonal base, a cylindrical body and a balcony. balcony is corbelled out in three rows of mugarnas more intricate than that of most other minarets of the same period. The lower and upper sections of the body are finished in glazed kashani tiles arranged in spiral Kufic inscription bands. However, old photographs taken during the early decades of this century show that the upper section and indeed many other decorations are now different. The minaret is crowned by a fluted cupola and a three-bead metal finial. Recent restoration work by the Awgaf resulted in the removal of all the nineteen shops which occupied the streetfront and recessed blind arches were built to replace them.

B. 120 HAMID SALMAN HOUSE

Historical Background This house is one of the finest traditional buildings in Haidarkhana mahalla. The richness of its detailing and its imposing frontage suggest that it was probably built by an important local personality. It was probably built around 1880. It is now occupied by several poor families with numerous children who are damaging its fragile fabric. It is certainly worthy of protection and documentation.

Architectural Description The house occupies a rectangular plot about 12 m. by 18 m. including an internal open courtyard about 5 m. by Its street-front, which roughly faces west, consists of two shanashil windows separated by a wall with four pointed arch windows. The shanashils are projected about 90 cms. over the street and are supported on the stepped ends of timber joists. They are identical and each contains four modular sash windows with pointed arch fanlights protected by vertical iron bars. The portal, located under the left-hand-side shanashil window, consists of a large segmental arch with its spandrels and tympanum decorated with a geometric pattern of brick mosaic. Its large double-door is adorned with typical Baghdadi carved mouldings and studded with brass knobs and has two knockers. The L-shaped entrance corridor has an elaborately muqarnased ceiling and leads to the courtyard. The interior arrangement of rooms is typical of traditional Baghdadi houses. The ground floor contains a colonnaded talar, a neem cellar and several service rooms. The neem cellar is surmounted by shallow domes on pointed arches and triangular cross-ribbed pendentives. The domes as well as the arches are decorated with polygonal patterns of brick mosaic pointed in white plaster. The upper storey includes a tarma, two shanashil rooms and an ursi room. The ceilings are all panelled in a typical concentric lozenge pattern and adorned with medallions of mirror mosaic. roof opening over the courtyard and the external facade are framed at the top by a curved wooden cornice crested with sachagh. Further research could reveal interesting facts about its history and original owner.

A. 124 HUSSAIN PASHA TOMB-MOSQUE

Historical Background Most historians agree that this Mosque was built around 1671 by Siahdar Hussain Pasha the Wali of Baghdad. Some accounts, however, mention the existence of an earlier mosque or a shrine. Karsten Niebuhr, who visited Baghdad in 1765, reported seeing inscriptions on its portal indicating an Ilkhanid origin, i.e. from 1258 to 1338. others, Alusi, Jawad and Jamil mention that the existing Tomb is that of Shaikh Ibrahim al-Fadhil b. Hassan b. Ali b. Abi Talib, and that it dates back to 1333. Jawad reported that this information was contained in 'Tumarı' inscriptions on the portal of the Mosque and that they were removed by the Director of Awgaf in the 1960's. Unfortunately, the whereabouts of these inscriptions are not known today and it is very probable that they were destroyed. The Mosque was last repaired in 1948 but is now in a very bad condition and most of its musalla has collapsed. It needs immediate restoration and documentation.

Architectural Description The Mosque is built on an irregularly-shaped plot about a hundred metres northeast of Haidarkhana Mosque. It consists of an open courtyard, a portico, the Tomb-room and a rectangular musalla. The musalla is about 14.5 m. wide and 23 m. long and is divided into three aisles by thick piers. It is surmounted by six depressed domes supported by pointed arches and triangular cross-ribbed pendentives. these domes collapsed around 1970 and have not been restored. mihrab is intact and is decorated by glazed kashani tiles and framed by Quranic inscriptions in Thulth type. The Tomb is placed in a square room 6 m. by 6 m. surmounted by a shallow dome. All domes are simply finished with a layer of earth mixed with straw (libin) on the outside. The minaret is in a very reasonable condition. It is located at the extreme northwestern corner of the tomb-room and consists of a cylindrical body The balcony is corbelled out in two rows of muqarnas and with a balcony. its facia is adorned by star-shaped kashani medallions. The whole body of the minaret is finished in kashani tilework in a diaper pattern devoid of inscriptions. It is crowned by a fluted cupola and a three-bead metal finial.

136 AQULI TOMB-MOSQUE

Historical Background This interesting Mosque commemorates the famous Hanbalite theologian Abdulla b. Muhammad b. Ali b. Hamad b. Thabit al-Wasiti, and also known as Jamal al-Din ibn al-Aquli. He was born in 1240 and died in his Baghdad house in 1327. He was buried in his own house which was then converted into a mosque. In his time he was a well-known teacher of Mustansiriya Madrasa and the author of several books. The Mosque that was built after his death was probably not too unlike the existing one despite the many restorations which followed. It was restored in 1683 by Muhammad Pasha, in 1761 by Sulaiman Pasha, in 1763 by Omar Pasha, and by the Awqaf in 1903. According to Massignon, its musalla fell down in 1853 and was not restored until 1901.

Architectural Description The Mosque occupies a squarish plot of about It consists of a large open and planted courtyard, 40 m. by 40 m. overall. a portico, musalla, and the Tomb-room. The Tomb-room is about 7 m. by 7 m. and contains the Tomb of Aquli which was covered by a superbly inscribed and decorated wooden 'sanduq' now removed to the Iraqi Museum. The portico is about 3.5 m. wide and 23 m. long, contains a mihrab, and is surmounted by six shallow domes on piers and pendentives. rectangular musalla, which is about 8 m. wide and 20 m. long from the inside, is divided into two aisles by four (rare) marble columns. relatively low and surmounted by twelve depressed domes on pendentives. The mihrab is octagonal and has a mugarnased top and the minbar is of brick and devoid of any decoration. The musalla and the portico are plastered white from the inside, while the roof and the domes are finished in a layer of libin. The minaret, which is perhaps the most remarkable feature of this Mosque, is located at the northeastern corner of the Tomb-room. It is about 25 m. high and has a balcony corbelled by a unique system of seven rows of oversailing saw-tooth like brickcourses. Originally, it was crowned by an unfluted cupola but now has a fluted one. This is very regrettable and should be corrected because a fluted cupola is typical only of recent mosques.

B. 137 HOUSE 17/102 AQULIYA

Historical Background This large and distinguished house was probably built around 1900 or slightly later. It is one of the most outstanding houses in Rusafa and deserves special protection and care. Its large size and architectural planning suggest that it was originally built as a school or for some other public purpose. The use of jack-arching is cruious and could be a later addition but this question needs more investigation. It is now owned by the governmental Mujammada which indicates that it was of former Jewish ownership, perhaps a Jewish school. It is being used as a hostel for students and is in a reasonably fair condition.

Architectural Description The building is situated on a corner plot near Aquli Mosque. Its two street-fronts consist of a plain brick wall at ground floor level and several serrated shanashil windows at the upper The shanashil windows are projected by jack-arching but some by oversailing brick courses. Their modular sash windows have pointed arch fanlights and are protected with vertical iron bars and wooden shutters. The building is crowned by a well curved and crested wooden cornice. The main portal consists of a pointed arch with brick mosaic decorations. The building occupies a squarish plot about 35 m. by 40 m. including an open courtyard about 15 m. by 20 m. The ground floor includes a bent entrance corridor, a planted courtyard, a colonnaded talar, numerous rooms which open directly towards the courtyard, and several service rooms. It is very likely that there were one or two deep underground cellars (sirdabs), probably filled up with earth and rubble because of water seepage. The ceilings of ground floor rooms have shallow domes on pointed arches and pendentives. The upper storey includes a very interesting colonnaded peristyle tarma, several shanashil rooms, a large ursi room, and several other rooms. The wooden columns of the tarma have simple muqarnased capitals. The doors and windows have semi-circular fanlights and are protected by vertical iron bars. The ceilings of the upper storey rooms, of the tarma and the talar, are panelled in the typical pattern of concentric lozenges. The continuous balustrade is made of wrought iron in a typical voluted pattern. The floors are finished with brick farshi tiles. The roof opening over the courtyard is framed by a curved wooden cornice crested with sachagh most of which has fallen off.

146 PANJA ALI MEMORIAL

Historical Background This small but important Shii Memorial was located opposite Mirjaniya Madrasa in Bab al-Agha area of Rusafa. According to Herzfeld, it was a square room surmounted by a dome. Inside, there was a small niche in which was placed a masonry or stone palm claimed to be a replica of the real palm of the Imam Ali. When Khalil Pasha Street (now Rashid Street) was driven through in 1916 it was pulled down and its contents and some inscriptions were relocated in a new building in Imam Taha mahalla. Alusi seems to link it with the celebrated Nidhamiya Madrasa (built in 1066) but unfortunately he gave no evidence. Herzfeld reported that the Memorial had a portal and a screened window on the street. The tympanum of the arched portal contained original inscriptions carved by the calligrapher Abu al-Saadi and dated AH 730 (AD 1330).

Architectural Description The present Memorial is simply a room, taken from a house in Imam Taha Street, about 4 m. wide and 6 m. long. The street facade consists of a portal and a small screened window. The portal includes a double wooden door and a pointed arch with spiral flutings and a tympanum of stucco floral decoration. About 1 m. above the window there are four inscription bands superbly carved in Thulth type and containing poetry and the date of AH 1336 (1917). It is probable that these inscriptions were part of the original Memorial and that the date was added later. Further research is needed to throw more light upon this very interesting historical Memorial.

159 MIRJANIYA MOSQUE/MADRASA

Historical Background Strictly speaking, this outstanding building was designed as a madrasa and not as a mosque, but because it contained a proper musalla it also became known as a mosque. It was founded in 1356 by the Governor of Baghdad, Amin al-Din Mirjan al-Uljaiti. He ruled on behalf of Uwais Bahadir Khan the son of Hasan Khan the Jalairid. Mirjan was a mamluk (slave) to the mother of Hasan Khan but became a powerful ruler in his own He also built the existing Mirjan Khan and the famous Dar al-Shafa Hospital which was destroyed during this century. buried in this Mosque and his Tomb was surmounted by an impressive The Madrasa continued to function until 1946 when it was mostly pulled down to widen Rashid Street. Only its portal and minaret were spared. This utterly indefensible act of official vandalism remains as a tragic reminder of what can happen in a country without strong public support for conservation. In a vain attempt to recreate the original exterior of the Madrasa, the Awgaf and the Directorate of Antiquities made 'several' partial reconstructions. These included the building of a small musalla on the northeastern side with three domes, the middle one of which was a poor imitation of the old one which surmounted the Tomb. The overall appearance of what remains and what is added looks rather ridiculous.

Architectural Description The old Madrasa was a squarish peristyle building of about 36.7 m. by 39.5 m. overall. It was built in two floors around an open courtyard of about 20 m. by 21 m. The entrance, which faced north-west, was emphasised by a large portal superbly decorated in carved brick and inscriptions. The portal was originally flanked by one minaret on either side but only one remains today (the left one) and the other one was either demolished, or it collapsed, long before the eighteenth century. The ground floor included a masalla, the Tomb of Mirjan, a colonnaded portico, a two-storey high iwan, and several other rooms. The musalla was about 6 m. by 15 m. in internal dimensions and located at the southwestern side of the building. It was surmounted by three depressed domes on pendentives. The Tomb was placed in a square room, at the southeastern side, which measured some 4.5 m. by 4.5 m. and was surmounted by a pointed dome raised on a unique fluted drum. The drum was about 6 m. high while the dome was about 5 m. which meant that the dome was easily seen from street level. The minaret which, incidentally, is very similar to that of Aquli Mosque, is largely plain and devoid of decoration. Only its balcony, which is corbelled out in nine rows of oversailing shallow brick-courses, is adorned by white and turquoise mosaic. It is crowned by an unfluted cupola and a two-bead metal finial. The musalla and the mihrab were extensively decorated and inscribed by two of the finest calligraphers of their time, Razin Qalam and Numan al-Thakai. Most of these inscriptions were fortunately saved from destruction and they are now exhibited at the Iraqi Museum.

NORTH-EASTERN FACADE

173 CATHOLIC SYRIAC CHURCH

Historical Background According to Babu Is'haq, this Catholic Church was built in 1841 after the Syriacs obtained a special permit (Firman) from the Ottoman authorities in 1838. In 1868, it was either enlarged or incorporated within a bigger church. It is known as Kanisat Maryam al-Athra, or Virgin Mary's Church. Its cemetery contains numerous graves including those of some notable Syriac leaders in Baghdad. It is well built and is perhaps one of the finest churches in Baghdad.

Architectural Description The Church building proper is roughly rectangular in shape measuring some 17 m. by 32 m. overall. consists of a rectangular three-aisle nave and an altar on its eastern The central aisle is surmounted by five domes on eight round columns and triangular cross-ribbed pendentives. The side aisles are also surmounted by five domes but these are of the shallow type and not expressed on the roof. The middle dome which surmounts the central aisle is raised higher than the others by a low octagonal drum which includes windows. The side walls of the nave, which are about 10 m. in height, have high-level windows to provide daylight and are screened by wooden lattice-work of typical Baghdadi decoration. main facade, which faces the north-east, contains five recessed pointed arches incorporating the windows, and three large double doors. of these doors was brought all the way from India and is very elaborately An interesting bell-cote with a small conical cupola is built on the left hand side of the northeastern side. Generally speaking. the Church is influenced more by Baghdadı architecture than by European.

174 LATIN CHURCH

Historical Background The first Carmelite Mission in Baghdad was established in 1721. The founder of the Carmelites, Father Marie Warle (d. 1742) obtained permission from the Governor of Baghdad, Ahmad Pasha, to build a church for his order. He first purchased a small house in 1731 and converted it into a church which became known as 'Mar Toma'. The existing church, however, was built in 1866 by Father Joseph Marai (d. 1898). It was completed in 1871. In 1917, the Turkish Army used it as a hospital. It was partly damaged by fire and was restored in 1923. It is now more or less abandoned and may be demolished.

Architectural Description The Latin Church complex occupies a rectangular plot about 50 m. by 70 m. overall and includes the Church. St. Joseph School, and an open courtyard. The Church proper is cross-shaped in plan (Crucifix) and measures some 25 m. in width and 35 m. in length. Its crossing, the area of intersection between the nave and the transept, is surmounted by a great hemispherical dome raised The dome is about 15 m. in diameter and 32 m. above on a drum. The drum, which is about 5 m. high, is polygonal-sided ground level. containing alternate blind pointed arches and glazed windows. is crowned by an octagonal lantern with pointed arch windows, and self-Inside, it is supported on four columns which carry finished in brick. the load from pointed arches and triangular cross-ribbed pendentives. The School, which was originally set up in 1737, is constructed in jackarching which suggests that it was rebuilt during the restoration of 1923. It is roughly L-shaped in plan and built in two floors. The southern section of the School is older and may go back to 1871. The western wing is about 50 m. long while the southern is 30 m. and both wings are about 10 m. in width. Ground floor rooms are entered directly from the open courtyard and their door openings have segmental fanlights. Upper floor rooms are reached by a continuous circulatory balcony which is balustraded by simple iron bars, and their door openings and windows have semi-circular fanlights. The balcony of the southern wing rests on eight wooden columns of mugarnased capitals which create the effect of a cloister. The School is in a very bad physical condition and needs immediate attention.

A. 192 SHAHRABALI HOUSE/MASBAGHA AHLIYA

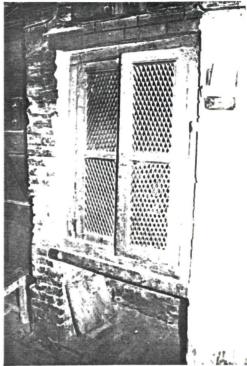

Historical Background According to its constructional method and type of decoration, this distinguished house was probably built around 1917 or slightly later. The richness of its interior makes it one of the worthiest houses for protection. Indeed, the official committee, which was set up in 1973 to select buildings of outstanding cultural interest, designated it for official protection. Although it scored only 60 points it was decided to grade it as A because of its exceptional qualities. Its present owner, who is the son of the original owner, said that the house took some four years to complete and that the adjacent house (No. 193) was in fact its 'Diwankhana' section. Regrettably, the house is being used for dyeing clothes - a process which has resulted in the deterioration of its fabric.

Architectural Description The house occupies a rectangular plot which measures some 10 m. by 18 m. Its external facade, which is the only one, faces northeast and consists of a brick ground floor and a wooden projected upper storey. The arched entrance portal is located at the left and includes brick mosaic decorations. The ground floor room which faces the street is provided with two windows of segmental arch heads. Their spandrels are decorated by polygonal brick mosaic decorations and they are protected by iron bars. The upper storey facade consists of one large shanashil (oriel) window flanked by two small kabishkan windows. The main window is projected about 70 cm. over the street by exposed jack-arching, and consists of nine modular sash-windows. The whole facade is framed by a curved wooden cornice crested with a chain of sachagh. The ground floor is U-shaped in plan and consists of an open courtyard (5 x 7 m.), a bent entrance corridor, a front room, colonnaded talar, and a large domed neem cellar. The two marble columns of the talar have spiral flutings and Corinthian-like capitals. The neem, which is located at the back of the house, is about 6 m. wide and 9 m. long and surmounted by three shallow domes on pointed arches and triangular cross-ribbed pendentives. The upper storey includes a shanashil room (with an ursi), an ursi room, two colonnaded tarmas, two kabishkans, and a continuous circulatory balcony on all four sides of the courtyard space. Both ursis have rectangular modular sash windows and are superbly decorated by intricate foliated patterns in carved wood. The decoration shows a general European influence. The ceilings of the talar, the ursi room and the shanashil room are decorated by typical Baghdadi patterns in interlaced wood and mirrors, and all are adorned by central medallions. The ursi room has a niche in its northwestern wall which is finished in mirror mosaic. The roof opening over the courtyard is framed by a wooden cornice crested with sachagh.

THE POINTED DOMES OF THE MUSALLA MIDTHE TOMB.

THE MOSQUE WITH THE NEW MINARET (SINCE 19405)

1.205 SAYID SULTAN ALI MOSQUE

Historical Background The historical origins of this important Mosque are still debated by scholars. According to Azzawi, there are two possibilities: the first is that the Mosque is attributed to Sharkh Ali who declared himself Sultan of Baghdad but was killed by his brother in 1383, the second is based on a manuscript written in 1880 by an unknown author and titled 'Rawdhat al-Aayan fi Akhbar Mashahir al-Zaman'. a certain Ali b. Yihaya b. Thabit b. Hazim al-Rifaii, who was born in 1066 in Basra and lived in Baghdad's Ras al-Qarya from 1125 until his death. Because he was favoured by Prince Malik, a memorial was built over his grave which then became a mosque. According to Jones, it was built by Ibrahim Pasha in 1681 but the Tomb existed before this date. It was restored in 1892 during the reign of Sultan Abd al-Hamid. It was partly demolished in 1934 when Rashid Street was widened. Its superb minaret and large portal, which included inscriptions by the famous calligrapher Uthman Yawır, were unfortunately pulled down.

Architectural Description The Mosque occupies a roughly rectangular plot of about 35 m. by 55 m. in overall dimensions situated between the Tigris and Rashid Street. Its present front is sadly taken up by an insipid modern two-storey office block. The Mosque consists of an open courtyard, with a minaret, an arcaded portico, the Tomb-room and a The musalla is about 10 m. wide and 22 m. long and designed in three aisles the middle of which is surmounted by a 10 m. diameter pointed dome on squinches and four round columns. The mihrab is particularly rich in decoration and inscription and to its right there is a wooden minbar. The Tomb is placed on a square room about 5 m. by 5 m. in size and surmounted by a pointed dome and unlike all the others it is distinguished by turquoise glazed kashani tiles. The new minaret, which was probably built around the early 1940's, is located at the northeastern corner of the courtyard and consists of a cylindrical body and a mugarnased balcony. It is crowned by a fluted cupola and a three-bead metal finial. There has been no attempt whatsoever to copy the original one.

STREET FRONT OF THE NEW MOSQUE

1.206 ABD AL-KARIM AL-JILI TOMB MOSQUE

Historical Background Al-Jili was born in Jil in 1365 and died in Baghdad around 1408. He was a famous Muslim mystic and the author of many books on religion and philosophy which influended the moulding of Islam. According to Alusi, who wrote his book on the mosques of Baghdad in 1903, the Tomb of Jili was domed and the Mosque was an important one. There are only a few references to this Mosque and these are largely concerned with the life of Jili and not with its description. Old photographs of this Mosque were not located and it is difficult to give any further details about its During the early 1970's, the Awgaf carried former appearance. out a major rebuilding operation and incorporated the tomb within The Awgaf also built a new small mosque on a new large school. The importance of this Mosque, or rather Tomb, the same site. lies in its historical and locational value and not in any of its present fabric.

Architectural Description The original Mosque and Tomb occupied a roughly rectangular plot of about 32 m. by 46 m. in overall dimensions including a large courtyard. The historic tomb is now placed in a small room (together with another tomb of one of his disciples) located to the right of the entrance. At present, there are no external signs or inscriptions indicating the existence of this important Tomb. Further research is needed to throw more light into the former appearance and plan of this historic building.

A VIEW OF THE RUINS OF THE TOMB-ROOM: THE DOME HAS COMPLETELY COLLAPSED BUT TWO SQUINCHES ARE INTACT.

, 219 IBN AL-JAWZI TOMB

Historical Background Abd al-Rahman b. Ali b. Muhammad Abu al-Faraj b. al-Jawzi was one of the most famous Hanbalis of Baghdad, where he was born in 1126 and died in 1200 after a life of great intellectual, religious and political activity. He began his career in the reign of Caliph Muqtafi (1136-60) helped by the patronage of the Hanbali Wazir Ibn Hubaira. He developed into a great teacher, jurisconsult, historian, and a preacher of several madrasas and mosques. During the reign of Caliph Mustadhi (1171-9) al-Jawzi became one of the most influential personalities in Baghdad and the Caliph had a dakka (dais) built for him in the Palace Mosque. The year 1178 marked the zenith of his life; he was then directing five madrasas and had already written more than 150 works. During the reign of Nasir (1179-1225) he became less active because of old age but did not withdraw from the political scene. When his supporter Wazir Ibn Yunis (d. 1197) was dismissed and replaced by the Shii Ibn al-Qassab in 1194, al-Jawzi was arrested and sent to live in Wasıt under house arrest. He remained in exile for five years until his release in 1198-9 on the intervention of the Caliph's mother. But soon after his triumphant return to Baghdad al-Jawzi died in 1200. He was one of the most prolific writers in Arabic literature. Ibn Rajab, in his 'Thail', lists more than 200 works, while Ibn Taymiya had counted and been acquainted with more than 1000 works of varying length. Some of his interesting works which survived are: 'Muntadham' (ed. Krenkow. Haydarabad 1938-40 6 vols.), 'Sifat al-Safawat' (Haydarabad 1936-7), and his laudatory 'Manaqib'. Ibn Jubair, the famous traveller who visited Baghdad in 1184, saw al-Jawzi during one of his sittings near his house on the riverfront close to Basaliya Gate (Bab al-Sharqi). This confirms the connection between the site of al-Jawzi's house and the existing Tomb in Rusafa (now in ruins). However, Jawad rejects the claim that this Tomb 1s that of al-Jawzi because "according to several sources, he was buried in the western side of Baghdad". In June 1973, officials of the Directorate of Antiquities discovered a grey marble plaque (shahid) inscribed in four lines in Thulth type and state that the tomb was restored in AH 1056 (1646) and that it is of al-Jawzi. The plaque is now stored at the Iraqi Museum.

Architectural Description Unfortunately, the Tomb has been allowed to decay considerably and all that remains of its original structure is a heap of rubble and a small section of the northern and western walls of the tomb-room The room was about 5 m. by 5 m. in dimensions surmounted by a dome, probably a pointed one, with squinches. The ground level of the room is about 2 m. below the ground level of the car park (in which it is now located) which suggests the old age of the structure.

B. 220 GARABAIT HOUSE

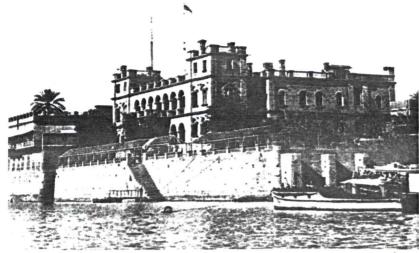

Historical Background This large and distinguished building is perhaps one of the finest on Rashid Street. It was probably built around 1925 or slightly earlier as a hotel or a commercial office. Its importance lies in its superior architectural design and detailing and uniquely long facade. It is now used by many shops, a hotel, and a printing press. Unless quick protective measures are taken it is bound to be demolished and replaced by a high-rise block.

Architectural Description The external facade, which is about 55 m. long and faces the north-east, is one of the finest in the city. Its horizontality is enhanced by the strong mugarnased cornice which divides the two The frontage at ground floor level is taken up by shops which are set back about 2 m. to allow for the colonnaded pedestrian pavement. The pavement columns, which are twenty-two in number, support the balustraded balcony on the first floor and have simple masonry capitals. The upper facade consists of rectangular windows and doors, alternately places, and crowned by recessed pointed arches decorated with brick The whole building is framed at the top by a continuous and well-curved wooden cornice created with sachagh. Originally, it seems that the building was designed in two parts, each having its own open courtyard. The western part is in a better physical condition than the It occupies a squarish area about 25 m. by 26 m. including eastern one. an open courtyard about 7 m. by 12 m. The ground floor includes a colonnaded talar and several rooms. The upper storey includes a continuous and balustraded balcony projected over the courtyard by jack-arching, a colonnaded tarma and numerous rooms now used as The wooden columns have simple un-mugarnased capitals. offices. The balustrade is made of lathe-turned wooden posts. The ceilings are panelled in teak. The eastern part is about 26 m. by 30 m. in area. Its courtyard has been built up to first floor level so its roof includes two colonnaded tarmas and several rooms. The roof openings over both courtyards are framed by a curved and crested cornice. One of the rooms of the first floor overlooking Rashid Street has a removable kashi tile over the entrance door so that the caller can be seen from above without him being aware - a secret device which is perhaps unique. The building is certainly worthy of protection and documentation.

A. 221 EX BRITISH RESIDENCY

Historical Background The year 1766 marked the establishment of the first British Residency in Iraq. It was located in Rusafa's Ras al-Qarya and on the bank of the Tigris. Around the beginning of the twentieth century a new Residency and a Consulate were built in the Sinak mahalla of Baghdad and also on the bank of the river. These two buildings survive today and have both been converted by the Directorate of Antiquities and Tourism Administration into a 'Costumes and Ethnographic Museum'. Hubbard wrote in 1916 that the British Residency buildings had cost the British some twenty thousand pounds Sterling. This substantial figure indicates the importance and large size of the Residency. Parfit wrote in 1920 that "the British Residency and Consulate-General was one of the finest buildings in Baghdad. The Germans persuaded a native protege (unidentified) to build a small house by the side of the Residency. The British Consul-General compelled the Turks to make him build a high wall on the roof to prevent him spying on behalf of the Germans". Further research, perhaps with the help of the British Embassy in Baghdad, could reveal interesting facts about the building and its former development. Photographs taken early this century show that the Residency has now been changed especially its riverfront. One gets the impression that the restorers were not bound by the former appearance of the Residency but adapted it to suit the requirements of the new museum.

Architectural Description The Residency building is about 32 m. by 38 m. overall. It is built in peristyle and includes an open courtyard of about 8 m. by 12 m. The straight entrance leads to the open courtyard which is colonnaded by wooden columns of staggered block capitals and not mugarnased ones as might have been before. The first floor includes a continuous tarma which is also colonnaded. The external facades are a curious mixture of European and Islamic styles. They included arched windows occasionally with triangular pediment-like features on top. The riverfront facade is the most elaborate and includes a long arcaded verandah on both floors. Each verandah had seven round arches on round columns and the upper one had a balcony in the middle. The present building has only the verandah of the first floor; the one on the ground floor has been built up. Internal doors and windows have segmental fanlights. Features which are missing at present include the superb brick embankment (Msanaya) which had a stairway to the river, the two wing rooms on the roof, the roof parapet and the roof cornice over the courtyard opening. NAQIB'S HOUSE IN SINAK B 225

(Plans show conversion proposals by Tourism Admin.)

B. 225 NAQIB RIVERFRONT HOUSE

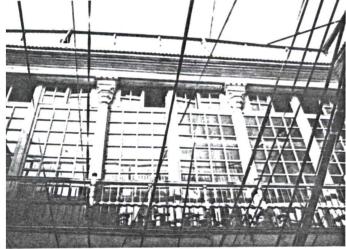

Historical Background According to its architectural style and detailing, this impressive house was probably built around 1900 or slightly earlier by Abd al-Rahman al-Naqib (1845-1926), one of the most important religious and political personalities in Iraq. He was the Guardian of the Tomb-Mosque of Gailani from whom he is directly descended and became the first Iraqi Prime Minister from October 1920 to November 1922. During the British Mandate, the house was occupied by British Army officers. The Tourism Administration has recently bought it from the Naqib family and intends to turn it into a museum.

Architectural Description The external facade and the internal planning are clearly influenced by the Tigris. Nearly all important rooms are located on the riverfront and provided with a long projecting verandah The verandahs of the south-western and western and many windows. facades are cantilevered about 1 m. over the riverbank by the stepped ends of timber joists, have slender wooden columns, and are roofed by sloping corrugated metal sheets. A shanashil window is built on the left of each verandah. Both have simple rectangular modular sash windows and upper sections. The house occupies a squarish plot about 27 m. by 28 m. including an open courtyard about 10 m. by 12 m. floor includes a bent entrance corridor, two vaulted neem cellars and three rooms facing the Tigris, a colonnaded talar, and service rooms. Internal doors and windows have segmental fanlights and are protected The courtyard contains a fountain in a circular with vertical iron bars. The upper storey includes five riverfront rooms, three small rooms, a colonnaded tarma, and a large kabishkan room with its own staircase from the tarma. The long ursi window of the mezzanine-level kabishkan is a rare example because it spans most of the (north-western) side of the tarma. The wooden columns of the tarma have mugarnased capitals. Doors have segmental fanlights while windows and recesses have semi-circular heads. The rooms which overlook the Tigris have European fire-places and kashi terrazzo tiles. They have panelled ceilings, the most interesting of which is the one of the room at the extreme western corner of the house. It is decorated in a very intricate pattern of interlaced and inlaid wooden pieces in 'khurda' design and adorned with a central medallion of mirror mosaic. The roof opening over the courtyard is framed by a crested wooden cornice and guarded by a wrought-iron balustrade.

B. 230 SARAJ AL-DIN SCHOOL

Historical Background This interesting two storey house, which was probably built around 1920 or slightly earlier, is among the finest of its type and period. It is being used as a primary school for the mahalla and this use has not adversely affected its physical condition. Its importance is architectural and its relatively good condition makes it worthy of protection.

Architectural Description The house occupies a square plot about 17 m. by 17 m. including an open courtyard about 7 m. by 7 m. Externally, its facade, which faces the south-east, is clearly expressed in two floors and consists of a brick wall with seven segmental arch windows and a portalat ground floor level and a projecting shanashil window with a verandah at first floor level. All the spandrels of the arched windows are decorated in geometric patterns of brick mosaic while the tympanum of the portal is in a foliated pattern of stucco. The upper storey is projected about 90 cm. over the street by jack-arching but the central verandah projects a further 50 cm. The modular sash windows of the shanashils have pointed arch fanlights protected with vertical iron bars. The whole building is crowned by a stepped wooden cornice crested by saw-tooth like small tiles. ground floor includes a direct entrance corridor, a neem cellar, a colonnaded talar, and other service rooms. Doors and windows have segmental fanlights and are protected with vertical iron bars. storey includes a continuous balcony projected over the courtyard by jack-arching, two ursi rooms with large ursi windows, and two shanashil The main ursi window has glazed doors in its lower section and a decorated glazed upper section with a simple four-point star motif. The spandrels of all internal arches are also decorated with geometric patterns of brick mosaic. The roof opening over the courtyard is framed by a stepped wooden cornice crested with tiles in saw-tooth fashion and guarded by a wrought iron balustrade. The floors are finished in terrazzo kashi tiles of various colours. The roof contains four wind-catchers (badgeers) located within the western parapet wall and their shafts ventilate and cool the rooms underneath, especially the neem cellar.

References Measured drawings of the building made by architectural students in 1966 are kept in the library of the School of Architecture of Baghdad University (some of which are reproduced in the Inventory card)

MUSALLA: WINDOWS AND DOOR INTO COURTYARD

B. 273 NAQIB MOSQUE

Historical Background According to Alusi, this small but very interesting Mosque (masjid) was built in 1895 by the Naqib of Baghdad of the notable Gailani family. Only a few mosques of its size and period survive today and those which do are not comparable to its good state of preservation. The Mosque seems to have escaped the usual ill-advised restoration by the Awqaf which is fortunate.

Architectural Description The Mosque is rectangular in plan occupying a plot of about 11 m. by 19 m. Externally, it is generally plain and devoid of decoration but has a small portal and an interesting 'sagaya' (drinking-font). The sagaya is not the original one and the water is now placed in a 'Hibb' (barbotine vessel) protected by a decorated iron-grill. The Mosque consists of a small open courtyard, two musallas, and service rooms. The main musalla, which is located at the middle of the southwestern side, is about 4 m. by 8 m. internally with its mihrab area surmounted by a shallow (Aragchin) dome on pointed arches and cross-ribbed triangular pendentives. The mihrab is simple and devoid of decoration and inscription. other musalla is about 4 m. by 9 m. in dimensions, surmounted by two shallow domes on pointed arches and triangular cross-ribbed pendentives. Both musallas are plastered white and give a quiet and pristine atmosphere. However, modern electrical lighting and fans are incongruously placed at important positions and disrupt its special character.

. 294 FADHIL TOMB-MOSQUE

Historical Background According to Felix Jones, this Mosque was built in 1782 but he gave no references for this date. The prevailing view by most Iraqi historians, however, is that it was built by Muhammad b. Fadhil in the fourteenth century to commemorate his father who was a Wazir to the Ilkhanids. The Tomb, which survives today, is claimed to be that of Fadhil Allah al-Khawaja Rashid al-Din. Some people claim that the Tomb is that of Ismail b. Jaafar al-Sadiq and that he was Sayid Sultan Ali's brother but this is rejected by mos historians like Jawad and Azzawi. The date 1795 given by Jones seems to be of a restoration by Sulaiman Pasha. The Mosque has recently undergone a major restoration by the Awqaf and given a new external treatment.

Architectural Description The Mosque occupies a squarish site of about 60 m. by 60 m. overall. The site includes a large open courtyard about 27 m. by 38 m., a domed musalla, and several rooms. The musalla is about 16 m. by 24 m. in internal dimensions and divided into two aisles by thick piers. It is surmounted by six domes, The mihrab and the minbar are not especially interesting. The Tomb is placed in a square room, about 6 m. by 6 m., located to the right of the musalla and surmounted by a dome. To the left of the musalla is the minaret. It is finished in glazed kashani tiles and consists of a cylindrical body and a balcony corbelled out in two rows of mugarnas. The facia of the balcony is adorned by eight-point star medallions inscribed alternately with the words of 'Allah' and 'Muhammad' in Kufic type. section of the body is decorated with a geometric diaper-like pattern of mosaic, while the upper section with diagonal bands of mosaic inscriptions in Kufic type. It is crowned by an unfluted cupola and a three-bead metal finial.

A. 311 CALIPHS MOSQUE (MINARET)

Historical Background The superb minaret is the only original part which remains today from the original Caliphs Mosque built by Caliph Mugtafi between 902 and 908. The Mosque was also known by the name of Jami al-Qasr because it was incorporated within the It was burnt down by the Mongolians in 1258 when Caliph's Palace. they captured the city. The Turkish ruler, Sulaiman Pasha the Great, built another mosque west of the minaret in 1779-1802 which became It is not clear whether the Ottoman known as Jami Sug al-Ghazil. mosque was built on the foundations of the original Abbasid one but this might have been the case. The minaret, which was not destroyed by the Mongolians but was restored in 1279, was allowed to decay to such an extent that the British authorities in Baghdad thought of blowing it up because of its dangerously bad structure. prevented largely because of strong protests from several notable personalities especially Alusi. The Ottoman Mosque was however demolished in 1957 when Jumhouriya Street was driven through its In the late 1960's, the Awgaf asked the Iragi architect Muhammad Makiya to design a new mosque which would incorporate the historic minaret. The new mosque is a reasonably successful example of how to inject a living context to a monument although some have accused it of being out-of-scale with the minaret.

Architectural Description The new Mosque occupies a roughly rectangular site of about 65 m. by 35 m. overall. It consists of the old minaret in the middle, an octagonal musalla, an arcaded riwag (closster) and entrance, and an open courtyard. The musalla is located to the east of the minaret and surmounted by a depressed dome about 14 m. in diameter and provided with arched windows at its base. The minaret is one of the most interesting in Iraq and its height of about 35 m. makes it the highest in Baghdad. It consists of a twelve-sided base, a cylindrical body and two balconies, one of which is low level and may be regarded as an extension of the base. base is 20.64 m. in circumference. The first balcony is about 6.30 m. in perimeter and includes two internal spiral stairs built ingeniously in such a way that two persons can ascend or descend the minaret simultaneously without seeing each other. The lower section is decorated in geometric Kufic-like (Alliyat) pattern. decorations are set in relief and end at the top with a wide inscription band which originally contained Kufic inscriptions. The second 'upper' balcony is circular and corbelled out in five rows of mugarnas brickwork. Its parapet wall is also circular and devoid of decorations. The upper section of the minaret is almost a third of the diameter of the middle section. It is devoid of decoration and crowned by an unfluted cupola and a one-bead metal finial. The cupola itself is finished with a diaper-like mosaic pattern. The minaret has been undergoing restoration work by the Directorate of Antiquities since 1938.

THE SCREEND WINDOW OF THE TOMB-ROOM (ON THE STREET)

A. 319 AL-SAYID HAMMAM

Historical Background This Hammam is perhaps the oldest surviving one in Baghdad. Although its date is not recorded it is probable that it belongs to the late Abbasid period. This is indicated by its complicated plan and by its general architectural treatment. Durubi suggests that it is Abbasid but he gives no reference or evidence. It is proposed here that it was built around 1400 but modified during the Ottoman period. Future research and site investigation and excavation could throw more light upon its history. It is now abandoned and may soon be demolished. In spite of its architectural interest and age, the Directorate of Antiquities has not shown any will to preserve it. Its women's section has been demolished and only its men's section remains.

Architectural Description The Hammam is built on a roughly rectangular plot of about 25 m. by 40 m. overall. It is entered through a small door on Sidriya Suq and, externally, it is just a plain brick wall. room, the disrobing place, is about 7 m. wide and 12.50 m. long and has been re-roofed with jack-arching, probably in the late 1920's. A door, located to the right, leads to the intermediate room (Wastani) and the The intermediate room is about 3 m. wide and 7.75 m. long and is barrel-vaulted. It leads to the hot-room (Jawani, Bait al-Harara) which is circular in plan and domed by a pointed dome about 4.5 m. in diameter with an oculus at its apex. It is supported on thick walls and squinches. Instead of the usual four iwans, there are only two, one of which leads to a long rectangular barrel-vaulted room which is 3 m. wide by 8.50 m. long. Its vaulting could have been pointed originally but successive rendering might have rounded it off. Its vault is pierced by three equidistant square oculi. This room was also used for bathing because of the presence of several small water basins (Hawdhs) arranged on either side. This is a unique hammam of considerable architectural interest and, therefore, there is an urgent need to list it and protect it from demolition. Its size and interesting structure makes it useful for many new uses.

THE MOSQUE BEFORE RECENT RESTORATION

,320 SARAJ AL-DIN TOMB-MOSQUE

Historical Background This important Tomb-Mosque commemorates a famous religious Shaikh who lived in Baghdad during the Jalairid period and died in 1350. He was Saraj al-Din Omar b. Ali al-Qizwini al-Shafii. The famous traveller, Ibn Battuta who visited Baghdad in 1327, reported seeing Saraj al-Din preaching a sermon at the Mosque of the Caliphs. He was buried in al-Zarradin Cemetery near al-Mandhara al-Mamuniya. According to Jawad, the two mahallas Saraj al-Din and Sidriya gradually replaced the original Zarradin Cemetery. The original Tomb, which was probably a simple domed structure during the fifteenth century, developed into a fully-fledged mosque in the course of time. In 1718 it was rebuilt by Hussain Pasha the Wali of Baghdad and it remained until recently when it was pulled down by the Awqaf (the minaret was left intact) and replaced by a new one in 1976. The new Mosque follows the old one only in its general layout but not in its detail.

Architectural Description The Mosque occupies a squarish plot of about 70 m. by 80 m. overall. This plot includes shops, open courtyards, a portico, the Tomb room, a musalla, and several service rooms. The Mosque building proper is about 18 m. wide by 35 m. long. consisted of six pointed arches resting on thick piers and probably roofed by shallow domes. The original musalla was about 10 m. by 24 m. in dimensions and most probably surmounted by domes, probably twelve in number. The new musalla has a flat roof constructed of reinforced The free-standing minaret, located at the eastern side of the Mosque, consists of an octagonal base, a cylindrical body and a balcony. The lower section of the body is decorated with swastika-like (Alliyat) patterns of coloured mosaic with a band of Kufic inscriptions at its upper part. The round balcony is corbelled out in three rows of mugarnas work and also decorated in mosaic. Its parapet wall is adorned by typical eightpoint star medallions inscribed with the different names of 'Allah' in Thulth type. The upper section of the body is similarly decorated and contains an inscription band in Thulth type. The minaret is crowned by a fluted cupola and a three-bead finial. The Tomb is placed inside a square room located at the north side of the courtyard. The room measures about 5 m. by 5 m. and 1s surmounted by a small pointed dome raised on a low drum and crowned by a two-bead finial. The dome is not glazed as is usual with most tomb-domes.

,322 SADR AL-DIN TOMB-MOSQUE

Historical Background This is a little-known but very interesting Mosque. It was first built by Sadr al-Din, the Qadhi of Baghdad in 1272. According to a modern inscription panel in the Mosque, he was Sadr al-Din Muhammad b. Shaikh al-Islam al-Hurawi al-Baghdadi, died in 1278 and was buried in his own Mosque. However, according to the historian Jawad, he was Shaikh Sadr al-Din Ibrahim al-Hamoui al-Juwaini, born in c. 1240 and died in 1322. Further historical research could reveal the real identity of the buried person. The Mosque was restored (or rebuilt) in 1792 by a certain Habib al-Dirgazli, and again by the Awqaf in 1920. Fortunately, these restorations do not seem to have substantially altered its overall plan or historic fabric.

Architectural Description The Mosque is situated at the eastern end of Sidriya Suq and occupies a roughly rectangular site about 15 m. by 30 m. The Mosque consists of the Tomb-room, a colonnaded portico overall. (or talar), two open courtyards, and service rooms. Externally, the street facade (S. W.) is just a simple brick wall with a small door. monotony of the plain wall is broken by a square decorative recessed panel in swastika-like brick mosaic pattern inlaid with turquoise colour. The straight entrance leads directly to the first open courtyard which is about 6 m. by 10 m. To the left of the entrance corridor is placed the Tomb which is in a square room surmounted by a small shallow dome on pendentives. The door opening of the tomb-room has a segmental fanlight crowned by a rectangular inscription panel in which are details of Sadr al-Din's full name and relevant dates. The talar is about 3 m. by 6 m. in area and provided with three wooden columns of muqarnased It also includes a mihrab at its south-western wall and acts as a prayers area during the summer season. The musalla is about 8 m. by 10 m. divided into three aisles by four octagonal piers. surmounted by six shallow domes on triangular cross-ribbed pendentives. The interior of the musalla (including the domes) is not rendered or plastered but self-finished in superb brickwork pointed with white juss. This gives it a cool and pristine atmosphere which seems to be found only at small masjids and not in large over-decorated Friday-Mosques.

, 325 KHULANI TOMB-MOSQUE

Historical Background This large Shii Mosque commemorates a certain religious shaikh who is claimed to have been the second Naib of the 'Awaited Imam' al-Mahdi al-Askari. This means that Khulani is the son of Uthman al-Askari who is buried in Baghdad (No. 28). inscriptions on the Mosque are correct, the Tomb goes back to the tenth century. There are only a few references to the existence of this Mosque before the eighteenth century. When Mustafa al-Dimashqi visited Baghdad in 1726 he reported visiting the Tomb of a 'Muhammad Khulani'. According to Jawad, his real name was not Khulani but 'Abd al-Azız b. Jaafar, known as Ghulam al-Khalal'. The Mosque has undergone several restorations by the Awqaf and by pious individuals. In the early 1970's, the old dome which surmounted the tomb was replaced by a new one so large that it now dwarfs the minaret. ill-advised because minarets are supposed to be the tallest structure in a mosque.

Architectural Description The Mosque occupies a large polygonal site of about 45 m. by 80 m. overall. It includes the domed Tomb, a freestanding minaret, a musalla, a modern library building, a large planted courtyard, and service rooms. The Tomb is placed in a square room, about 10 m. by 10 m., surmounted by a high pointed dome. which is raised on a circular drum with pointed arch windows, is finished in plain green kashani tiles and crowned by a three-bead finial. transition of the load is achieved by triangular cross-ribbed pendentives. The tomb-room has two recessed pointed-arch iwans with inscriptions filling the whole of their tympanum. The new musalla and portico have been roofed by reinforced concrete and look very incongruous with the rest of the Mosque. The most interesting feature of this Mosque is perhaps its minaret. The minaret, which is located outside the Mosque and to its west, is very similar to the minaret of al-Askari in Samarra with its characteristic diagonal bands and verandah. It consists of an octagonal base, a cylindrical body and a corbelled verandah. verandah (covered balcony) is corbelled out in two rows of mugarnas and has a metallic parapet wall. It is crowned by a fluted cupola and a finial.

A. 355 GAILANI TOMB-MOSQUE

Historical Background Abd al-Qadir al-Gallani (or al-Jili) was born in 1077 in Jilan and died in Baghdad in 1166. His pedigree is claimed to trace back, on the father's side, to al-Hasan the grandson of the Prophet. He came to Baghdad at the age of eighteen to study religion and attended the philosophical classes of Tibrizi (d. 1109) and learned Hanbalite Law from a number of well-known Shaikhs. He married several wives and had forty-nine children. Some authorities state that he became the guardian of the Tomb of Abu Hanifa. He learned Sufism from Abu al-Khair al-Dabbas (d. 1131) and was surnamed 'al-Baz al-Ash'hab' meaning the 'Silver Falcon'. A takya was built for him to conduct his preaching, and in 1134 the Madrasa of the Qadhi of Hanbalite Law, al-Mukharrimi, was enlarged and Gailani was installed as its head. He was the author of numerous works all of which were on religion and some consisted of reports of his sermons or addresses. He became the formost authority on religion and founded the 'Qadıryıa Tariqa'. He was buried in his madrasa and his tomb soon developed into a large mosque attracting pilgrims from all over the Islamic World. Unfortunately, there are very few contemporary references that describe this Mosque. al-Asrar', the writer reported that "the Mosque was now in ruins, whose seven gilded domes have often served as the subject of description by Arab historians". The Mosque was probably damaged during the sack of Baghdad by the Mongolians in 1258 and also by the Persians in 1508. After defeating the Persians in 1534 the Sultan Sulaiman the Magnificent restored the Mosque and replaced the conical dome which surmounted the Tomb by a pointed one which still exists today. Because of the importance of this Mosque, the successive rulers continued to maintain It was restored by Murad Khan and Sinan Pasha in 1542; in 1638 Sultan Murad built the great dome over the musalla which survives today; in 1712 the old minaret was rebuilt by Sultan Ahmad Khan and again rebuilt in 1865 by Ali-al-Naqib. In 1878 Salman al-Naqib built the second (western) minaret, and in 1900 Abd al-Rahman al-Naqib built the clocktower. Since the early 1960's, the Awqaf has been extensively restoring it and extending its riwaqs. Amanat al-Assima has cleared the area surrounding it from all directions and this has resulted in the serious loss of its former historic setting. The 'restorations' by the Awqaf are not always scientific or careful. New features have been added and old ones destroyed without record.

Architectural Description The Mosque occupies a squarish site about 105 m. by 115 m. overall. This area includes the domed musalla and the Tomb, an L-shaped courtyard with two minarets and a clocktower, student rooms, a library, and numerous other service rooms and tombs. There is also a cemetery on its souther side. There are two entrances to the complex, the main one being the eastern. The Mosque building proper is roughly rectangular in plan, about 45 m. wide and 75 m. long, and consists of a square musalla and the Tomb-room, and a U-shaped riwaq which encloses them. The musalla is about 18 m. by 18 m. surmounted by one large depressed dome elliptical in section built in It is raised on an octagonal drum on triangular cross-ribbed pendentives and mugarnased squinches at the corners. On three sides of the musalla is the mahfal supported by piers and elegant marble columns with capitals of acanthus scrolls. The mihrab is enclosed in a quadrangular panel with interesting inscriptions. To its right is the marble minbar. To the left of the musalla is the Tomb of Gailani. The Tomb is placed in a square room, about 6 m. by 6 m., and surmounted by a magnificent dome on a high drum. The Tomb room is separated from the riwaq (atrium) by a small iwan surmounted by three domes, the central of which is largest and with mugarnas. entrance to the Tomb room is surmounted by superb inscriptions and the door is a masterpiece of wooden craftsmanship. The room is finished with mirror decoration but the lower part of the walls have a marble dado. Unlike all other domes in the Mosque, the dome which surmounts the Tomb is distinguished by its colourful kashani glazed It is raised on a drum, the upper part of which contains a band of Quranic inscriptions in Thulth type. It is crowned by a four-bead finial fitted in 1757, probably replacing an earlier one. The interior of this dome was decorated with Quranic inscriptions in Naskhi type by the calligrapher Abd al-Jabbar in 1900. The L-shaped riwaq is divided into two aisles by a row of marble columns with elegant capitals decorated in geometric patterns. The same type of columns are found in the western side of the riwaq, where there is a mihrab on its southwestern wall. The eastern side of the riwag is somewhat different. Instead of columns, there are thick piers, and there is another mihrab recently restored in Moorish style. The riwaqs have been restored and changed several times in recent history. Photographs taken in 1919 show twenty-six domes over them, while at present there are thirty-nine. The additional domes have been added between 1960 and 1970 by the Awgaf. Two free-standing minarets are located in the courtyard at opposite decorations. The eastern one was first built in 1499 as shown in a marble inscription on its body. It is somewhat similar to that of the Caliphs Mosque, about 25 m. high and has two balconies, the lower one of which is more or less an extension of the base. Both balconies are The body is decorated with geometric corbelled out in mugarnas. diaper-like patterns of glazed mosaic work and crowned by an unfluted cupola with a three-bead finial. The minaret was restored in 1878. The western minaret, built by Salman al-Naqib in 1878, has a cylindrical body and one corbelled balcony. Its lower section is decorated with spiral bands of kashani glazed tiles, while its upper section with Kufic inscriptions. It was rebuilt in 1962. The clock tower, which was built in 1900, seems to have been copied from the Qushla Clocktower in Baghdad built by Midhat Pasha in 1869. It is located on the western corner of the open musalla, about 20 m. high, and has a 3 m. by 3 m. Its square shaft tapers gradually to about 2 m. by 2 m. and ends with an octagonal balcony on which is placed an octagonal lantern of a three-bead finial. The present clock has three bells which ring hours, half hours and three-quarters of hours. It was brought from the famous Indian factory of 'Baukha'. The L-shaped courtyard is surrounded by rooms on two storeys (54 in number) used by students and staff. ground floor rooms have Iwans on the courtyard and a small window on the outside. There are five stairways which lead to the upper storey rooms through a colonnaded tarma of wooden columns.

. 360 BANDANIGI TOMB-TAKYA

Historical Background Bandanigi Takya is one of the few buildings of its type to have survived from the eighteenth century. It was founded in 1772 by Ali al-Bandanigi, a devoted Qadiri shaikh and religious scholar. His surname 'Bandanigi' means that he or his ancestors come from the town of Bandanig (today's Mandili). He is related to the celebrated author Safa al-Bandanigi who wrote 'Jami al-Anwar fi Manaqib al-Akhyar' in 1666. Ali al-Bandanigi died in 1809 and was buried in his Takya which was then extensively restored in 1810. The Takya is still administered by one of his descendants Hashim Safa al-Bandanigi.

Architectural Description The Takya occupies a squarish plot about 32 m. by 34 m. overall including a large open courtyard. It consists of an arcaded portico, a musalla, the Tomb, and service rooms. portico has recently been rebuilt with modern materials and consists of eight pointed arches on nine columns. It also includes a mihrab to indicate the direction of Mecca during prayers in summer, and a long inscription band on its facade. The musalla is about 10 m. by 10 m. surmounted by a pointed dome on squinches. The dome, which is finished with farshi bricks on the outside, contains three windows and is crowned by a three-bead and a crescent metal finial. The Tomb of Ali al-Bandanigi is placed in a room about 8 m. by 10 m. located at the extreme southern corner of the building. The Tomb is surrounded by a wooden screen and covered by a sanduq with green drapery. is surmounted by a small shallow dome on squinches. is about 20 m. by 23 m. and contains a large planted area with four mature date-palms. There are several small rooms, off this courtyard, with screened windows which probably served as cells for sufis (hermits) and others. Considering it is privately owned and administered the Takya has been kept in remarkably good condition but much old fabric has been lost through bad repair. There is a real need to protect and document it officially.

MUSTA'SIM'S TOMB: DENTITY OF PERSON BURIED IS NOT AUTHENTICATED. THE TOMB IS PROVISIONALLY LISTED AS GRADE 'A' PENDING FUTURE RESEARCH

A. 371 CALIPH MUSTASIM TOMB

Historical Background Mustasim, the last of the Abbasid Caliphs, came to power in 1242 but was cruelly put to death by Hulagu in 1258. Contemporary sources and chronicles do not state where he was buried, Ibn Battuta, who visited Baghdad in 1327, stated that the last thirty-two Caliphs (including Mustasim) were buried in the Cemetery of the Caliphs in Eastern Baghdad. This Cemetery is known to have been situated between Abu Hanıfa's Tomb in Abbasid Rusafa and Rusafa Ibn Battuta's account is somewhat unreliable because the Tombs of the Caliphs were most probably destroyed by the Mongols. However, they could have been restored later. The existing grave, whose location is about 3 km. southeast of the site of the Cemetery of the Caliphs, is claimed to be that of Mustasim but this is not yet It is not clear how it was linked with the last Caliph authenticated. but a plan of the Sahrawardi Mosque in which it is located, prepared by the Awqaf in the 1940's, shows the grave indicated as that of Mustasim. The late Iraqi historian, Mustafa Jawad, wrote that the bodies of Mustasim and his two sons Ahmad and Abd al-Rahman were secretly buried by the Mongols. However, the Tomb is provisionally listed here as grade 'A' pending future research and investigation because it could be most valuable evidence if authenticated.

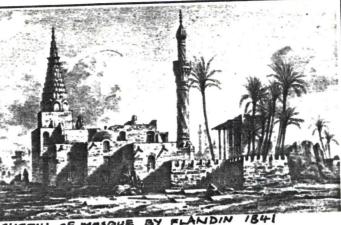

Architectural Description The Tomb is placed in the middle of a small room located off the Tomb of Sahrawardi (No. 372). It is indicated by a small dais about 50 cm. by 125 cm. raised about 25 cm. from the floor and covered with terrazzo kashi tiles. There are no inscriptions or decorations of any kind.

. 372 OMAR SAHRAWARDI TOMB-MOSQUE

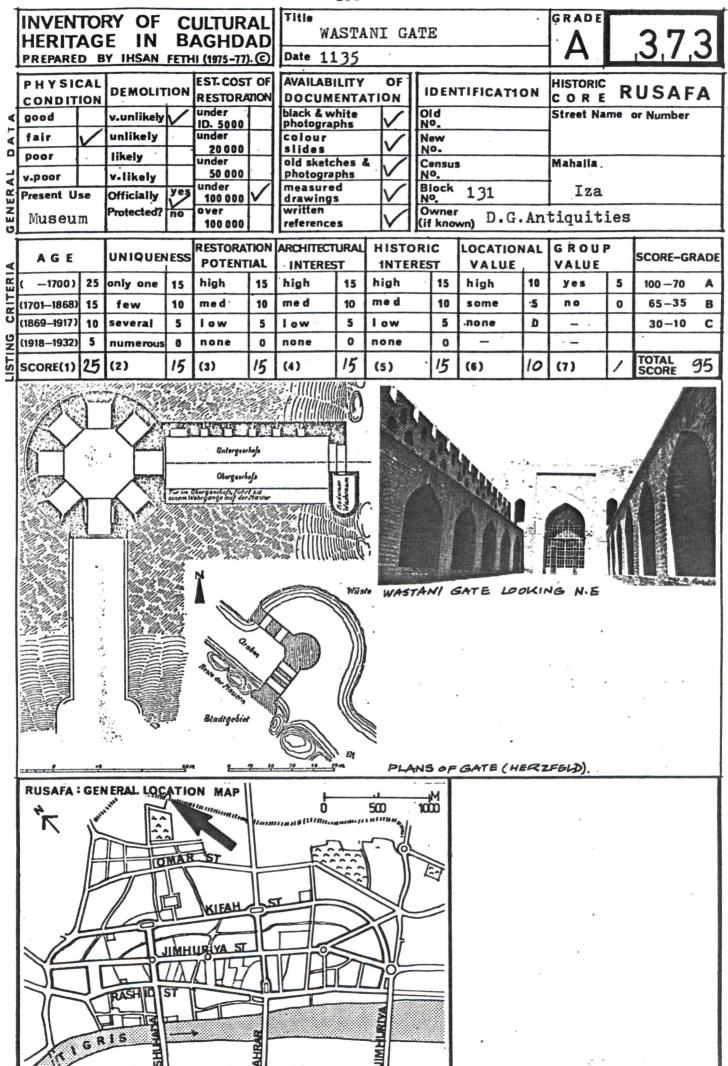

Historical Background This Mosque is one of the most important Abbasid buildings which survive today. It is situated near the Wastani Gate and is regarded as a very valuable historical and topographical monument. It commemorates the celebrated Shafii Shaikh, Abu Hafs Omar b. Muhammad b. Abdullah Muhammad b. Amawaiyh, also known as Shihab al-Din al-Sahrawardi. He was born in 1144 in Sahraward and died in Baghdad in 1234. He was buried in the Wardiya Cemetery and his Tomb was developed into a mosque shortly afterwards, although several historians reported the existence of a mosque before Omar's The Mosque and Tomb were restored by a certain Muhammad death. b. al-Rashid in 1335 as shown on an inscription above the entrance of the tomb room. The Mosque was restored in 1833 by Alı Ridha Pasha and in 1856 by Ismail Pasha who also built the tarma, portico, and a It was again restored in 1902 and the minaret was rebuilt. madrasa.

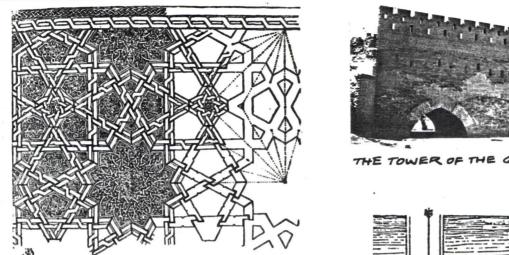

Architectural Description The Mosque occupies a roughly rectangular site of about 40 m. by 54 m. overall. It includes a large open courtyard, a portico, a musalla, the Tomb, and service rooms. The oldest part consists of the square Tomb-room and a long barrel vaulted anteroom added in 1335. The Tomb is boxed and covered by a wooden screen. The room itself is 4.70 m. by 4.90 m. surmounted by a conical dome whose interior is effectively reduced by a shallow dome added during the restoration of 1856. The internal walls of this room are plain to a height of 6.50 m. from which and up to the square base of the dome there are three arched recesses on each side. The base of the dome is emphasised by a band of inscriptions and two rows of large mugarnas extending to a height of 1.30 m. and contains four arched windows. The shallow dome is built on the muqarnas and adorned by a painted circular medallion of foliated and inscribed design. Externally, the conical dome is built on an octagonal drum and consists of eleven rows of mugarnas. Recent restoration work revealed that the interior of the dome was painted in a colourful foliated pattern. its northern external side, there are superb carved brick inscriptions very similar to those of Mustansiriya Madrasa. The musalla is about 15 m. by 19 m. inside and includes an interesting mihrab and a

The minaret, probably built in 1512, is located at the northern corner of the musalla and to the left of its entrance. It was demolished and rebuilt by the Awqaf in 1948 and it appears that the original one was totally different in its decorations from the present one. The sketch made by Flandin in 1841 (reproduced in inventory card) shows a minaret with spiral bands on its body, while the existing one has diaper-like pattern in Kufic The courtyard facade of the musalla and the portico have been restored recently by the Awgaf. The street facade, which faces northwest, was probably built in 1902. It consists of a central portal and two arched windows on either side. The portal is recessed and has a mugarnased pointed arch whose spandrels and tympanum are decorated with polygonal brick mosaic patterns. The whole facade is framed by two brick pilasters of mugarnased capitals and by a curved brick cornice at the top.

. 373 WASTANI GATE

Historical Background This Gate is the only one which survives from the Abbasid walls of eastern Baghdad. The walls and their gates were built by the Caliph Mustadh'hir (1094-1118) and completed by his son Caliph Mustarshid (1118-1135). However, it is not certain whether this Gate was built by Mustarshid or al-Nasir because the latter rebuilt the walls at the end of the twelfth century. The Gate has been restored by the Directorate of Antiquities and was used, until recently, as a museum for old arms and weapons.

Architectural Description The general plan of the Gate and its ramp is roughly Z-shaped. The Gate itself is L-shaped which is characteristic of Abbasid defensive techniques. The right-angle turn in its passage meant that the attackers would have to turn left and thus expose their unshielded right hand side. The eight-metre wide ramp, which starts from outside the ditch, slopes up for about 25 m. and then turns left for about 30 m. until it reaches the Gate. A portal with a five-metre high pointed arch leads to a short passage and to the octagonal room inside the tower. This room is about 9 m. in diameter and contains six arched iwans surmounted by a shallow dome. This room is not expressed as an octagon on the outside but as a circular tower of about 17 m. in diameter rising to 13.20 m. above ditch level. passage leads to a 21.50 m. long open arcaded way which leads down It is about 10 m. wide and contains six arched iwans on either side. The iwans are set within the thickness of the walls and Their flat roof is reached by a stairway and has a have loopholes. crenellated parapet with numerous loopholes. Two of the most interesting features of the Gate are the carved brick inscriptions which crown the round tower and the decorated spandrels of the portal. The inscriptions are badly damaged and difficult to decipher. the restoration work has been generally good, measured drawings prepared by Germans early this century show some errors. example, the first iwan nearest to the tower is about two and a half times wider than the others and had a semi-circular arch, while the present one is similar to the others. There is a need to excavate the immediate vicinity of the Gate to reveal the foundations of the old walls.
