APPENDIX 2

PAINTINGS PURCHASED FROM KRÜGER, 1854 AND THEIR SUBSEQUENT FATES

The following list of paintings purchased from Krüger is taken from the handwritten list of paintings purchased from him that was sent to the Trustees in May 8, 1854. That list followed Krüger’s catalogue. They are therefore first described by the German titles, masters and places of origin from those sources. For clarity, the pictures are identified here by their number in the Krüger catalogue (eg. KC I:1) and either their NG inventory number or their lot at the National Gallery sale of 1857 (eg. NG 260 or Lot 3).

Information on the medium and size of the pictures, and their current attribution, is taken from the most recent sources. For those paintings unrecovered since 1857 I give the medium and size from Krüger’s catalogue, with Koenig’s metric conversion in brackets. I have followed Koenig’s method to convert the sizes of pictures he did not address in Part II of Krüger’s collection. The fates and changes in attribution of the pictures after 1854 are listed chronologically after each picture.

The aim of this Appendix is to provide a summary and reference point for previous research on the paintings and their fates after the National Gallery purchased them, with some additional details that have come to light through this study. Fritz, Levey and Koenig published prices and buyers at the National Gallery sale, Koenig published the provenances of all of Part I of Krüger’s 904 NG NG5/105/1 and 2. That list also contained Part III of Krüger’s catalogue, which was not purchased for the Gallery.

905 Krüger, Gemälde-Sammlung. Published by Fritz, "Der Katalog."
906 Koenig applied the calculation 1 rhein Fuß = 0.31385 m, 1 rhein Zoll = 2.615 cm. Koenig, Meister von Leisborn, 58.
collection after 1857, and Pfeiffer, van Oyen and others have published provenances of specific groups of Krüger’s paintings. Selective rather than comprehensive bibliographies are provided, and readers are directed to cited sources for fuller bibliographies. New information specifically relates to the treatment of the forty-seven pictures not required for the National Gallery, which were stored in the basement there until they were prepared for sale in 1857. There is new information about the fate of some of the fragments from the Bielefeld Marienaltar wings (see fig. 65), and one or two other sold paintings, and about the treatment of the paintings loaned to other institutions in 1857 and 1862. Further details about the loaned paintings can be found in Appendix 8. Further details about buyers at the 1857 sale are in Appendices 9 and 10.

907 Fritz, “Der Katalog,” 95-96; Levey, German School, 113-14. They are taken from the annotated NG copy of the sales catalogue Christie and Manson, Catalogue of Pictures Not Required. See also “Resolution on 55 pictures from the Krüger Collection not Required for the National Gallery, 19 January 1857, NG NG5/214/1.

⁹⁰⁹ See Appendix 9: German Lots at the 1857 Arranged by Buyer and Cost; and 10: Identities of Buyers at the 1857 Sale.

⁹¹¹ Measurements for KC I:2-4, 6-7 are for the panels as bought, when they had three subjects each.

1854-7 Stored in National Gallery basement.
1857 Sold as Unknown, end of 14th Century, Panel with Three Subjects: The Forbidden Fruit, the Fall, the Expulsion from Paradise. From the Church at Schil desche near Bielefeld. Purchased by Hermann for £ 1.2s.

At some unknown point sawn into three individual panels. All three remained together, along with other fragments (fig. 65).

Before 1936 Unknown private owner, England.
Before 1936 Discovered, along with seven other fragments from the wings, by Tomas Harris, of the Spanish Art Gallery in an outhouse at an unidentified country sale, some time after he began working for his father’s gallery business in 1928. According to Anthony Blunt, “Tomas Harris had an uncanny instinct for discovering works of art in unexpected places, and one of his most important acquisitions – a series of fifteenth-century German panels which had once been in the National Gallery – were bought among the contents of an outhouse at a country sale.”

Reframed in the Spanish Gallery by 1938 as three individual panels assembled into a larger frame with other wing fragments (Fig. 110).

a. The Forbidden Fruit/ God Warning Adam and Eve (60.7 x 43.0 cm).

1936-7 Luzern, art dealer Böhler.
1937-after 39 London, Tomas Harris, Spanish Art Gallery.
After 1939-1952 Luzern, art dealer Böhler.
Since 1952 R. A. Oetker Collection, Bielefeld (Inv. No. 303).

915 Unless otherwise specified, sizes of all fragments from this altarpiece are from Pfeiffer, Malerei am Niederrhein und in Westfalen.
b. The Fall (60.5 x 41.5 cm).

b. Presentation in the Temple (58 x 41.6 cm)\(^917\)

? Private owner, England. Fritz noted the marks of the National Gallery and an English art dealer on the reverse, but did not specify that one sticker quoted Friedländer calling it “very good German picture painted about 1400.” This suggests it either remained in, or passed through British hands around the early 1900s, by which time Friedländer was already an authority consulted for attributions in Britain.\(^918\)

Before 1924 Offered at Auction by Rudolph Lepke, Berlin.
1924 Berlin, Galerie Karl Haberstock.
1924 Given to Kaiser Friedrich Museum, Berlin by Galerie Karl Haberstock (Inv. 1934).\(^919\)

DISPERAL OF THE KRÜGER COLLECTION IN BRITAIN: A SUMMARY

NOTES ON THE RECONSTRUCTION OF THE LIESBORN ALTARPIECE, 2014

The National Gallery now has eight fragments from the Liesborn Altarpiece: two from the wings painted by Jan Baegert c. 1520, and six from the central fixed portion painted by the Master of Liesborn c. 1475-80. All eight were purchased with the Krüger collection, 1854.

Six further fragments (all from Baegert’s wings) were also purchased with the Krüger collection, but were sold again in 1857. They are all now in the Landesmuseum, Münster, Nine other fragments from the altarpiece were not sold to the Gallery with Krüger’s collection. These are all now in the Landesmuseum. Eight of those fragments were from the central section by the Master of Liesborn. The ninth was Baegert’s Descent of the Holy Ghost, now on long-term loan from a private collection.

A new reconstruction of the altarpiece was attempted in 2014 in conjunction with the National Gallery exhibition, Strange Beauty: Masters of the German Renaissance. Fragments now in the National Gallery were combined with grey-scale reproductions of those in Münster in a fixed display space (fig. 61). The attempt followed Brandl’s reconstruction with modifications arising from technical analysis and close inspection of the panels at the National Gallery, including examination of the panels’ backs and dendrochronological analysis of those fragments that have not been transferred to canvas.\textsuperscript{1054}

According to Brandl there were two fixed fields either side of the central crucifixion scene with the Annunciation and Nativity top and bottom on the left, and Presentation in the Temple and Adoration of the Kings on the right. He gives the combined width of the central section as 290 cm. Eight panels showing the Passion, Resurrection, Ascension and the Coronation of the Virgin formed the outside of moving shutters painted by Jan Baegert that were added to the altarpiece around 1520. The front and back of these wings had been sawn apart and the inner paintings lost, but Brandl proposed the \textit{Last Judgment} panel (also in the Krüger collection, and sold by the National Gallery in 1857) was on one side, and a Fall or Expulsion from Paradise on the other. The eight Baegert panels measured the same overall width as the central section of the Liesborn Altarpiece, and mirrored their internal frame dimensions.

Brandl’s differed from previous reconstructions that proposed Jan Baegert’s panels belonged to a different altarpiece, and that the central section by the Master of Liesborn had all four Infancy panels fixed on the left hand side of the crucifixion. This arrangement presumed that four other panels, now lost (probably with the Resurrection, Ascension, Pentecost and Last Judgment), were on the right, following the form of the Lunen altarpiece.\textsuperscript{1055}

\textsuperscript{1054} Brandl, ”The Liesborn Altar-Piece, a New Reconstruction”; Report by Dr. Peter Klein (8 August 1995) in the National Gallery Dossier for NG 263, Brough and Dunkerton, ”Construction of Two Panel Trays.” Foister, unpublished notes for “The German Paintings Before 1800.”

Brandl’s reconstruction depended upon interpretation of records from Liesborn Abbey about payments to Jan Baeggert made 1517-22, the iconography of the altarpiece and the measurements and technical analysis of the panels themselves.\textsuperscript{1056} Subsequent analysis of the panels at the National Gallery strengthens the case for Jan Baegert panels being the wings of the Liesborn Altarpiece. Klein’s dendrochronological analysis revealed that one of the oak boards in Jan Baegert’s \textit{Christ Before Pilate} (board I) came from the same tree as one of the boards in the fragment of the \textit{Adoration of the Kings}. Board II of \textit{Christ Before Pilate} also came from the same tree as board III of the \textit{Coronation}. This points to the panels being prepared at the same time.

Dunkerton and Brough suggested the Baegert panels could be reconstructed from technical information offered by their backs alone, such as the way oak panels and dowels lined up. Visual analysis of the painted surface revealed traces of red paint or showed unpainted raised edges on Baegert’s panels that indicated which were above or below the internal red painted frame, and which abutted the external frame that was later planed off. Traces of an original red painted border on the top edge of the Liesborn Master’s \textit{Presentation} panel

Both cited by Brandl, in agreement with Müller, argues that these archives and payments were associated with the parish church rather than monastery of Liesborn. Müller, \textit{Das Kanonisenstift und Benediktinerkloster Liesborn}, 19. suggests it was below the Adoration of Kings, rather than above it, as Brandl and Pieper had suggested.

The National Gallery reconstruction attempted to test these findings. The experiment was hampered by a number of factors. The combination of original painted fragments and greyscale pin-point photographic reproductions resulted in inconsistencies in size and scale between the fragments and the visual relationships between them. There were discrepancies between the ways the original panels were measured (something which has long hampered reconstruction attempts), and many had in any case been transferred to canvas and modern supports. Even where accurate measurements were known, during the reconstruction modern frames and supports prevented fragments from being placed appropriately and interfered with the visual outcome. The exhibition design format offered a predetermined width for the whole altarpiece with fixed gaps between sections that did not allow for alteration once the fragments were in place and these problems became apparent. This meant that the central section was unfortunately squeezed so that, for example, not enough room remained for Christ’s body to have fitted. More work is clearly needed on both the measurements of the panels and on their visual placement in relation to each other to produce a satisfactory reconstruction.

Despite such shortcomings, the reconstruction experiment offered a visualization of the fragments of the altarpiece all together as never before seen, and revealed interesting relationships between the sections. It supported Brandl’s comment that Baegert may have deliberately employed devices, forms and colours to match the earlier panels. For example his framing arches resonate with that of the Liesborn Master’s Annunciation; the dominant gold ground in the Resurrection and Ascension connect them visually to the gold ground of the central crucifixion; and in the Coronation Baegert’s youthful guise of Mary, her dress, hair, visage and pose recall the Liesborn Master’s Annunciation. It would not do to over-press these similarities: many are stock stylistic features and it remains unclear what was on the inner side of the wings, which unlike the outer sides would have been visible at the same time. Jan Baegert’s typical use of symmetry, repetition and reversals for meaning and visual interest became clear when the panels are in their proposed original positions. The reconstruction therefore especially underscores his qualities as a painter that would not have been visible to nineteenth-century viewers who encountered Baegert’s panels as individual paintings.

BRITISH SALES OF EARLY GERMAN ART

Part I

Summary of Early German Paintings In a Sample of Auction Catalogues by Decade, 1800-60

This tally of auctions of paintings attributed to German artists by decade from 1800-60 is offered as an indicative sketch rather than comprehensive analysis. It gives an indication of German paintings and painters coming to auction, and the relative increase in their number and range represented in the 1850s.

The data includes all German schools and artists up to the mid-sixteenth century identified in auction catalogues, except Holbein. Holbein was excluded because of the excessive numbers of paintings attributed to him in sales catalogues: according to the GPI database, around 1,200 “Holbeins” appeared in British auctions, 1800-40.

There are significant disparities between the sources of data for the decades. Up to about 1840 data is chiefly drawn from the GPI of database of priced Sales Catalogues. This data is not yet available for later periods. For the 1850s and 60s I drew data from Redford, Graves, Lugt, and selected samples of sales catalogues.\textsuperscript{1057} This data disparity is most obvious in the dramatic drop in

\textsuperscript{1057} Chiefly Foster’s priced catalogues and ledgers, 1850s, NAL; Christie’s 1850-51, 55-57, Christie’s Archives and the catalogues in this appendix. Redford, \textit{Art Sales}; Graves, \textit{Art Sales, from Early in the 18th Century to Early in the 20th Century} numbers of “Dürers” sold after 1840, which may not only be due to the smaller data sample, but also to better understanding of his work and therefore more skepticism about attributing things to him. Aside from some specific cases, it is impossible to know how many of the “Dürers” and “Holbeins” were by other German artists.

More significant than actual numbers of sales, which remain relatively small, is the significant increase in the range of named masters and schools after 1850, which was otherwise only seen at the very start of the century. Aside from paintings by Dürer, those early auctions were almost all of works from the collection of Count Truchsess. Repeat sales from this collection and of a single painting attributed to “Burkmair” in the 1820s are indicated with *. The diversification of painters represented at auction 1850s is connected to the National Gallery sale and the cluster of sales discussed in Part II of this appendix.

Cluster of Sales with Early German Paintings, 1851-59

A cluster of sales of collections in the 1850s increased the number and range of early German paintings at auction. The National Gallery sale and six others each brought five or more German works to auction, which was unusual. They were not the only sales of early German paintings at that time. The lots, buyers and prices are provided here as comparisons for the Gallery sale and as examples of German paintings in a range of British collections formed up to midcentury.\textsuperscript{1058} Attributions are as given in sales catalogues. German drawings and prints were also offered at many of these sales but are not indicated here.

1067 Returned March 29, 1926. All paintings loaned to Ireland were recalled following an inspection in 1925. NGI Minute Book, October 7, and December 2, 1925 and February 3, 1926 and NGI Annual Report, 1926.

1068 National Gallery of Ireland Catalogues and Annual Reports for the period. Inventory numbers changed in 1857, 1864, 1872 (when they were rehung) and 1890. The way the paintings were listed in the index of the catalogues often differs from the way they appear in the text, or indeed do not appear. It is therefore not clear when individual paintings were displayed. NGI Annual Reports for 1875 and 1892 record rehangs of the German pictures.

\textsuperscript{1071} As loans these pictures cannot be traced in the general registers (MA/9/1). Records for the Circulating Collection at the V&A Archives are incomplete, and the register numbers given to the Krüger pictures have since been re-assigned making them impossible to locate in the Circulation Dept. Object Cards from 1844 (MA/10/1/-8). Paintings in the Circulation Inventory 1844-1908 are only listed by medium and number (MA/9/28). Annual Reports do not specify paintings, nor do the catalogues of special collections from 1864 onwards. The Krüger pictures are not recorded in the Inventories of Objects Acquired by Year 1852-67 (MA/16/1). They are not mentioned in the Catalogues of Art deposited as longer-term loans to Schools of Design, DS&A Annual Report, 1869, Appendix D. Some dates for circulation are noted for some pictures, but unsystematically, and according to a memo written by 'R. Laskey' dated May 2 1889, the dates for the superfluous picture's circulations had been omitted in the Day Books and Loan Register (Blue Memo attached to Loan Register, V&A MA/31/1). The only sources with references to them are: conservation records for some repairs in 1865 and 70 (NG Consdervation records); a note on the bad condition of their frames, May 1881; a note dated June 26 1882 which states Mr Charles Lock Eastlake (1836-1906, Keeper 1878-98) asked Donnelly at South Kensington for a report on the condition and whereabouts of the pictures, and a draft of that report; a brief summary (dated June 28, 1882) and longer account (dated July 3, 1882) of the circulation of all loans from the National Gallery to sixty-two schools of art, and a list of those then in Bethnal Green; Eastlake's agreement for the frames to be repaired dated July 17, 1882. V&A, National Gallery Index, MA/1/N120/1 no 3925/82, and incomplete records and a blue memo dated May 2, 1889, noting the condition and whereabouts of the pictures in the Loan Register, MA/31/1.

IDENTITIES OF BUYERS AT THE 1857 SALE

Evidence of the identities of buyers is circumstantial, and is drawn from looking at directories and databases of dealers, framers and restorers, and for patterns of purchases in priced auction catalogues and databases of sales.\(^{1074}\) Appendix 5 provides evidence of their purchases of German paintings at other sales. For Buckley, see chapter 3.

Anthony

Probably William Anthony listed in the 1856 Post Office Directory as “picture cleaner” of 1 Duke Street, St. James.\(^{1075}\) Anthony was a frequent buyer at auction sales in the 1850s-70s, where he bought single and multiple lots from fifteenth- to nineteenth-century schools. Most were under £10 but some considerably more. For instance, at the Bernal sale he bought the “Memling” Madonna Enthroned with Infant for £95.11s.\(^{1076}\) His name is among the most frequent buying German paintings in the 1850s-70s. Another example from the Bernal sale is the “Cranach” portrait he purchased (lot 916) which was later purchased for the Gallery in 1887 as a portrait by Aldegraver, and is now called \(^{1075}\) He is not “Anthony of Dublin” who purchased and sold works up to the 1840s.

\(^{1076}\) Christie, Manson, and Wood, Catalogue of...Ralph Bernal.
The posthumous sale of his stock of over 650 paintings included Italian, Dutch, Flemish, British and German paintings from the fifteenth to eighteenth centuries. Among them were four unattributed “early German” religious panels and a “Cranach.”

Graves

Presumably Francis Graves (1802-60) or his brother Henry Graves (1806-92) who together had considerable expertise in printing and dealing in prints, and had a commercial art gallery in Pall Mall. For instance, Graves bought extensively at the sale of Bammeville’s print collection. Francis Graves was an expert in ancient masters and portraiture and acted for wealthy clients, including Lord Northwick and the National Portrait Gallery. Graves purchased paintings often at sales in the 1850s and beyond, including buying and selling German paintings for wealthy clients. He bought “Dürer’s” Adoration of the Name of Jesus at the Bernal sale, and later sold it to Lord Northwick, and bought three Cranachs at the Bammeville sale that later entered the Baring collection.

Hermann

Probably Louis Herrman, listed in the Post Office Directory as picture dealer at 92 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury. Variants of the name (Herrman, Hermann or Herrmann) appear regularly at sales from the 1820s-80s and very likely belong to more than one buyer. The name appears frequently at auctions by Foster and Christie in the 1850s-80s, especially around the time of the National Gallery sale, buying inexpensive works of eclectic taste in bulk. For instance, he purchased fourteen lots for just over £30 at one sale in 1858 and thirty-five at another in 1873.1082 Hermann/Herrman purchased eleven lots at the Alton Towers sale; eight at Lord Northwick’s and five at Dennistoun’s, among them German works. He is identified as “Herrman of Russell Street” in the priced catalogue of the Northwick sale. Louis Herrman had moved to 60 Great Russell Street by his death and his stock was auctioned in 1884. It included around 300 paintings, ranging from early Italian, Flemish and German works to modern watercolours. Some were attributed (probably aspirationally) to well-known painters, including Dürer, but most were given vaguely to a school or nation. Most lots sold for a few shillings or pounds. None of the Krüger pictures can be identified among them.1083

Jenkins

It has not been possible to identify this buyer. The name does not appear in Lugt but he was a buyer at the auction immediately following the National Gallery sale.\textsuperscript{1084}

Merrett

His identity is uncertain. The name is written more like “Menato/Menate” in the priced catalogue in Christie’s archives, contrary to the distinct “Merrett” written in the same hand in other contemporary Christie’s priced catalogues. If it was Merrett he might have been Henry Merritt (1822-71), a picture restorer, art critic and novelist who restored paintings for the National Gallery from at least 1858, the National Portrait Gallery from 1859, for Redgrave on the Queen’s pictures from 1862, and for the Fitzwilliam Museum, as well as other institutions and private clients. Gladstone was one of his clients.\textsuperscript{1085}

Rigge/Riggo/Rizzo

Rigge is difficult to identify and his name is indistinctly written in the Christie’s priced catalogue. “Rigge” bought numerous works at other Christie’s auctions from at least the 1850s. He often bought early Italian works, including one of Spence’s imported Italian paintings auctioned by Christie and Manson in \textsuperscript{1084} Christie and Manson, \textit{A Catalogue of Gallery Pictures by Italian, German, Flemish and French Masters... February 14th, 1857}. Priced copy, Christie’s Archives.

1858. He purchased numerous lots at other auctions by Christie and Manson January-February 1857, including a “German School” pair of subjects (unspecified).

Watson

It is not certain which of the several Watsons active at auctions around the National Gallery sale is our buyer. The Post Office Directories from 1856-82 list thirteen possible dealers of pictures, curiosities and furniture with that name. One candidate is Edward F. Watson, who operated as a picture dealer, restorer, artist, carver and gilder from 1830 to 1877 at St James’ Gallery of Art, 201 Piccadilly. Another is George and Henry Watson, a “curiosity dealer” at 31 Duke Street. This is presumably the Watson who sold Francisco de Orsona’s Adoration of the Magi to the South Kensington Museum 1865.

Robinson noted that “Mr. Watson, Duke Street, Oxford Street,” asked £100 for it, adding that “Messers. Watson knows (sic) nothing about the picture and it would not be well to enlighten them.” “Watson” made many purchases of single and multiple lots at auctions between the 1850’s and 70s, across the range from fifteenth- to nineteenth-century schools. Most of these purchases cost under £10. A buyer by that name was particularly active at sales around the National Gallery's. Watson bought two Italian religious paintings imported by Spence in 1858; five paintings at the Dennistoun sale, including a portrait by "Matt Guindenwald" (sic.); six paintings at the Bammeville sale; five at the Alton Towers; and ten at the Count Orza sale in February 1857.

White and/or Wright

It is not possible to identify this buyer from the many of this name at contemporary sales. Whites with the initials W. B. (probably William Benoni); E; E.F.; H; D; D.T.; and “of Bond Street” purchased at auctions from 1845 to 1876, but almost all bought later British and Dutch paintings for £100 or more.

APPENDIX 11

A BRIEF ANALYSIS OF PRICES IN THE NATIONAL GALLERY SALE

i. Correlation of Price with Surface Area

ii. Correlation of Price with Width

iii. Correlation of Price with Height

iv. Prices Charted against Lot Order

i. Correlation of Price with Surface Area

Lots (indicated by dots) plotted by area against price in pence shows that paintings with larger surface areas typically cost more. The line of best fit demonstrates a moderate relationship ($R^2=0.55$).

For sizes see Appendix 2. Because of discrepancies in measurements they are approximate.
ii. Correlation of Price with Width

The correlation is weaker ($R^2=0.30$) when lots are plotted by width against price.

iii. Correlation of Price with Height

The relationship of price to height is stronger ($R^2=0.67$) than between price and width.
iv. Prices Charted Against Lot Order

The order of lots shows some evidence or orchestration by auctioneers to create peaks of value, especially at the end of the sale.

Fig. 63 Iris Herpers, ZRW Gelsenkirchen and Götz J. Pfeiffer, Reconstruction: Master of the Berswordt Altarpiece, Marienaltar made for the former Monastic and Parish Kollegiatstift Sankt Maria und Sankt Georg, (now Neustädter Marienkirch), Bielefeld, c. 1400. Egg tempera on oak, 2.23 x 6.64 m with wings open.
The wings were detached from the central panel, which remains in Neustadt Church, Bielefeld. The wings were sawn along the registers into six horizontal strips with three episodes each, roughly indicated by the red lines. The three episodes of each strip were later separated from each other. Two episodes from the top register of the right wing were separated before the British Government bought Krüger's collection and their whereabouts is unknown. One episode from the middle register of the same wing has been lost since 1857.
