ST. GILES' STREET AND ST. MARY MAGDALEN STREET, BOROUGH OF ST. GILES

The most common forms of these street names throughout the medieval period are vicus Sancti Egidii and vicus Sancti Marie Magdalen., which occur in the majority of the surviving deeds. Variations on the form Saintgiligate are found less frequently. The earliest version recorded in the deeds is spelt Santgiligate, dating from 1304. The most popular 14th-century spelling is Sevntgiligate/Seintgiligate, occurring in deeds from 1343 to 1384. By the 15th century, the English translation of the street name is shortened to Gelligate (1489), Gelygate (1480) or Gyligate (1438), a version which persists into the 16th century. St. Mary Magdalen street has the alternative name le Maudelayngate in the 14th century. Both street names probably derive from the dedications of the local churches in the area.

These two streets were situated in the borough of St. Giles. St. Giles' street, or Gillygate, ran from Clayport at its western end, rising towards the north-east. Beyond the church of St. Giles, it divided into two, one road leading east towards Sherburn Vill and hospital and the other running north towards Sunderland and the coast. It was a main route to Durham from the vills of north-east Durham and it was probably a busy road because of the traffic to and from the priory estates like Pittington. As such, it is called via regia or vicus in the deeds. The street of St. Mary Magdalen descended from the north side of St. Giles' street towards the river and the hospital from which it took its name. It was of less importance than St. Giles' street because it was not a main route towards the centre of the town.

St. Giles' street and St. Mary Magdalen street formed the urban area of St. Giles' borough, sometimes referred to in deeds as lying iuxta Durham. The boundaries of this borough seem to have been clearly demarcated in the medieval period from those of the adjacent borough, the bishop's borough, which lay to the south-west of St. Giles. The leaden cross placed in the middle of the road marked the end of Clayport and the beginning of St. Giles' street. The western boundary of the borough seems to have followed the line of a lane known later as Tinkler's Lane which descended from the south side of the street towards the river, and another lane called Bakehouse Lane on the northern side of the street. Pellaw stream was a natural boundary for the borough on its east side with the fields of Old Durham beyond it. The northern limits of the borough seem to have been the demesne lands of Kepier, separated from St. Giles' borough by a ditch called Thwertcoverdike, and to the north-east, the fields of the borough ran as far as Gilesgate moor, an area of open grazing for the tenants of the borough.

Within the borough of St. Giles was an area of separate jurisdiction amounting to some twenty-six acres. This was called St. Mary Magdalen parish and it lay behind the street frontage of St. Giles on its northern side, between the street and the river. The historical origins of this jurisdiction are somewhat obscure, but it appears to have come into existence as a result of the foundation and endowment of a hospital for the poor, possibly in the early 13th century. The earliest surviving deeds which concern land in this area are, unfortunately, undated, but appear to be late-13th century and, in them, property is conveyed to the priory. Naturally enough, given the nature of the foundation, land in St. Mary Magdalene was allocated to the Almoner's estate in Durham and tenants living there owed rents and services to him. The street of St. Mary Magdalene contained a few buildings, but most of the parish consisted of small fields and closes. Some of these were kept in hand by the Almoner; the hay from them was bought in by the priory and the Almoner's horses grazed on the fields.¹

Speed's plan of Durham of 1611 shows that St. Giles' street was built up along both sides as far as the church, where gaps and irregularities appear in the street line. A much less regular pattern of buildings is shown on Wood's plan of 1820; the buildings peter out at the northern end of St. Giles' street and along St. Mary Magdalene street. The priory rentals, especially those of the Bursar, describe the units of land along St. Giles' street as burgages, rather than the more usual term for land in Durham, tenements.² These burgages probably contained buildings along the street frontage with gardens behind, like John de Piscerno's land which had a house and garden adjoining it (1338).³ There are few surviving indications of the layout of these burgages along the street. In only one case are the dimensions of a burgage given: in 1316, Robert, son of Ralph Daunce, held a tenement which was forty feet wide and sixty feet long.⁴ However, several deeds refer to land lying "in length" from the road as far as, for example, the Pellaw stream, which strongly suggests a typical burgage pattern of land lying with its narrow end along the street frontage.⁵

The gardens of these burgages seem to have been bordered by ditches which separated the urban area from the borough fields and, presumably, prevented animals from wandering at will among the crops. When Roger Gracias granted Thomas Othehall an acre of arable land in the borough in 1343, it was described as lying next to the ditch of the gardens of St. Giles.⁶

Most of the domestic buildings in the streets seem to have been of a fairly cheap or rudimentary fabric and construction. There are no references to stone-built houses in any surviving deeds or in the account rolls. The common building material, as mentioned in the leases, was timber. ¹ Some houses had "slate stone" roofs, but others, like the Almoner's houses in St. Mary Magdalen street, were thatched. ² Gutters presented difficulties between neighbours, as they did in Fleshewergate. William Lumley was obliged to repair the "evesdroppes" of his house in St. Giles street in 1338 because the overflow on to his neighbour's house was causing severe damage. ³ There are no references to any shops or stalls in these streets in the surviving evidence.

Perhaps the most important public building in St. Giles' street was the church, set back from the south side of the street, on the crest of the hill overlooking the centre of the town. ⁴ A lane led to the church and its cemetery between the burgages. ⁵ This church was, originally, the chapel for Kepler hospital which was founded as a refuge for the poor and infirm by Bishop Flambard in 1112. ⁶ When the hospital was re-founded by Bishop Puiset in the 1180s, it was moved to a site by the river, towards the north, and the church became the parish church for the borough. Puiset added a new chancel arch to the church and extended it, presumably because of the enlarged congregations, and during the 13th century a tower was added. ⁷ There was a parish fraternity attached to this church called the guild of St. Giles. ⁸ The chapel of St. Mary Magdalen originally stood by the river bank to the north of St. Giles' street. However, because it was founded in terra aquosa et minus tuta, permission was given by the bishop in 1449 to move it to higher ground. ⁹ The Almoner was responsible for the expense of rebuilding this chapel which was dedicated in 1451,\(^1\) and parts of it remain to this day beyond Gilesgate. The hospital buildings were probably grouped around the chapel, and the street of St. Mary Magdalen led to it.

Less is known of the borough court house to which all tenants owed suit and came to pay their rents. In a charter dated 1373, Constance Tailour granted Thomas de Kyrkland her burgage in St. Giles\(^1\) street which lay next to domum de Kypier vocatam le Curthous.\(^2\) This court, which dealt with a wide range of petty offences as well as property transactions, like the Crossgate court, was presided over by the master of Kepier or his steward. The borough also had its own common bakehouse, to which all tenants were obliged to come to bake bread. It was situated on the north side of St. Giles\(^1\) street,\(^3\) perhaps at the west end of the street, alongside the lane known as Bakehouse Lane, but there are no surviving details of its construction.

The water supply for these streets may have been provided by the well which lay behind the burgages on the north side of St. Giles\(^1\) street. A pathway to this well had been created by the inhabitants of the borough across land held by William Hexham. It was the subject of a court case in 1343 when the inhabitants accused Hexham of obstructing this pathway illegally.\(^4\) Subsequently, it was found that there was no right of way; the path had been made informally and illegally after a house on the land had been destroyed by the Scots.

The surviving deeds do not merely deal in property transactions. At least fifty per cent concern strips of land, called rods, riggs or selions, which lay in the fields of the borough, beyond the burgages.\(^5\) Clearly, there was a three-field system of cultivation in operation in St. Giles\(^1\) borough, and the deeds refer to land held in the east, north and south fields (or crofts) of the borough.\(^6\) There was no west field because the land was taken up by the parish of St. Mary Magdalen. Each tenant of the borough may have held a strip of land in each field, but by the late 13th century, it seems that the wealthier inhabitants, like the Whetelaw family, were buying up several pieces of land to run together as a more economic unit. Peter de Whetelaw, for example, accumulated five and a half acres of land in the south field, lying between the road to Sherburn and the Pellaw stream (1320s). 1

The scarcity of surviving evidence concerning land in St. Giles, apart from the land which passed into priory ownership, makes any assessment of the number of trades or occupations in the area very difficult. There is no indication that any one trade predominated in these streets, although the presence of tenting frames on the outskirts of the urban area suggests that cloth was being manufactured here. 2 The location of these tenting frames also demonstrates that there was plenty of open land available in this part of town. Some deeds reveal the occupations of those holding land. Several merchants lived in St. Giles street, including Thomas Othehall (or de Aula) who held land and property on the south side of the street in 1343 and who had strong family ties with Whitby in Cleveland. 3 Richard de Stafford, another merchant, bought Thomas Othehall's land in 1349. 4 The carpenter, Richard More, who had property in Clayport and Sadlergate, held several burgages in St. Giles in the late 15th century, one of which he conveyed to the priory. 5 Other inhabitants of the borough in the late 15th century were employed as part of the priory's building workforce in Durham. John Gubyon, who held property on the south side of the street, thatched priory tenements in Elvet in 1499, 6 while Robert Thomson was a carpenter working within the abbey in 1497. 7

The burgages in St. Giles street were held, in burgage, from Kepler hospital during the whole period. This borough had been granted to Kepler by Bishop Puiset as part of its re-endowment in the 1180s; consequently, freehold and landmale rents, varying, according to the surviving evidence, between 16d. and 3s. 10\frac{1}{2}d. for a burgage were owed to Kepler and paid at the borough court. The tenants also owed suit of court to Kepler; in the case of the earl of Westmorland who held five tofts with gardens and eight acres of land in the borough by 1426, he or his representative made three appearances each year to perform fealty at the three capital court sittings. In addition, a few tenants owed labour services to the hospital. Nigel de Elmeden held an acre of land in the south field of St. Giles in the late 13th century. He owed Kepler six autumn works for this land. Richard More's burgage owed landmale of 16d. a. to Kepler, suit of court and 1 precaria in autumn (1484). There seems to have been no money commutation of these services, even in the late 15th century.

The priory managed to acquire several burgages and some small estates within the borough, the most notable gain being the chaplain, Thomas de Lumley's, land in 1386. His estate consisted of three messuages, twelve acres of land and twelve acres of meadow, worth 106s. 8d. in rent income to the priory. Among the many other acquisitions were the burgages of William Palfrayman (c. 1451) and Richard More (before 1484), and the estate of Thomas Claxton (1386). Some tenants, like Thomas Ryhall, chose to leave property to the priory in their wills; others, like William Palfrayman, left the reversion of their burgages to the priory while making provision for their relatives during their lifetime. Most of the priory's acquisitions were allocated to the Bursar, who drew twenty-seven rents from the street by the early 16th century. The Commoner drew three rents from St. Giles' street. These obedientiaries were able to lease out this property for high rents. Thomas de Lumley's land, for example, was leased to Thomas Hyndley in 1407 for a rent of £4 p.a. ¹ Despite these gains, the majority of holdings in this street remained in the ownership of Kepler hospital and the priory's legal and financial interest was minimal.

Although the priory's property in St. Giles produced higher leasehold rents, there were considerable outgoings. Firstly, landmale or freehold rents and labour services continued to be owed to Kepler hospital even though the priory had acquired the property. The Lumley estate alone owed 11s. 7d. p.a. in landmale. ² In 1397, the Bursar's payments to Kepler for his property in St. Giles' street amounted to 30s.; by 1420 they had risen to 38s. 1½d. and by 1503 he was paying 53s. 1½d. p.a. which was quite a drain on his rent income from the street. ³ Secondly, many of these rents were unpaid because burgages lay waste. Shortly after the Bursar acquired his first property in the street, the 1396 rental recorded many waste properties and by 1500, many burgages had been amalgamated into larger units which became gardens or orchards. William Archbald held three waste burgages on the south side of St. Giles' street which were turned into a close by the early 16th century. ⁴ There is evidence that rents had been reduced in some cases, probably in an attempt to attract tenants. The Almoner's one-acre meadow near St. Mary Magdalen was leased for 8s. p.a. in 1422, 6s. 8d. p.a. in 1439 and 6s. p.a. in 1542. ⁵ Thirdly, the Bursar's account rolls reveal that considerable sums of money were spent on rebuilding work in the street. In 1425, for example, £4. 9s. 6½d. was spent on repair work in this one street, yet the Bursar's gloomy inventory of 1446 assessed the cost of repair work necessary on his eleven tenements in St. Giles in walling, timber and roofing with stone and straw at £29. 6s. 4d., and at over £40 by 1464. ⁶ There seems to have been a general decline in this street from the late 14th century onwards which made the priory’s acquisition of property there seem like a liability. Perhaps this part of Durham’s urban area, like the edges of the Old Borough, was shrinking gradually as it lost any economic prosperity.

The lack of surviving evidence makes it impossible to reconstruct an accurate guide to these streets. There is no complete list of burgages in the street; the 1542 Receivers’ book seems to contain a record of all the priory’s property, but it has proved difficult to relate many of the surviving deeds to these entries or to the earlier Bursar’s rentals. Consequently, there have been changes in the organisation of the documentary material for the streets. The guide begins with forty numbered sections based on entries in the Receivers’ book, starting on the north side of St. Giles’ street at its western end and proceeding to its eastern end. The entries for St. Mary Magdalen street are included here. The guide then continues along the south side of St. Giles’ street, from the east to the west. After this, the guide incorporates most of the surviving deeds, grouped as closely as possible according to their location in the street. Finally, there is a large section of miscellaneous deeds which cannot be related to any rental entries or to any group of deeds.

4. THE BAILEY
THE BAILEY

The name of this street usually appears in its Latin form in the surviving deeds. Tenements are said to lie in Ballio, or, more precisely, in the North or South Bailey. There are occasional examples of the English translation of the street name, like le Southbailvæ (1449), le South Baille (1449) and Southbaylye (1467).

The Bailey was situated in that part of Durham which fell directly under the jurisdiction of the constable of the castle. It was contained within the outer walls of Durham castle and it was considered to be part of the castle itself. It was not included in the central bishop's borough which lay immediately to the north. The section of the road called the North Bailey ran from the North Gate of the castle at the south end of Sadlergate towards the south. The gate to the abbey precincts was the boundary between the North Bailey and the South Bailey. The South Bailey descended towards the south-west and the South Gate of the castle. Several important lanes branched off from the main Bailey road. Owengate left the west side of the North Bailey almost immediately within the North Gate and it was the main approach road from the town to the castle. There was a gate at the west end of this street. In 1448, Nicholas Chaunceller held the tenement next to the gate called Owenvgate. Kingsgate left the east side of the North Bailey beyond the church of St. Mary and it descended steeply to the east gate in the castle wall. Thomas de Raby held land in Kingsgate in 1316 which lay next to the gate. The name of this street is said, by local legend, to derive from the route taken by William Rufus as he fled from the power of the incorrupted body of St. Cuthbert. There may have been a bridge called Bow Bridge linking Kingsgate with Elvet borough by the mid-15th. century, as the endorsements to some deeds suggest.

Certainly there was a ford here in the earlier medieval period. Almost opposite Kingsgate, on the west side of the North Bailey, was a small lane or vennel rising towards the Placea, the area between the castle and the cathedral church. This land was called Lygate in some rentals, a reference probably to the nearby abbey cemetery and the cemetery of St. Mary's church, although in the Almoner's rentals it is called, along with Kingsgate, le Chare. Several pathways ran between the tenements along these streets, connecting the road with the castle walls.

The tenements along the Bailey seem to have been of more irregular shapes than those in the outer Durham boroughs, probably because they had to be fitted within the castle defences. The castle walls were the dominant boundaries of tenements in this street. Thomas de Raby's tenement in Kingsgate, for example, extended from the road as far back as the castle wall next to the gate (1316). Several tenements lay in a conventional manner with their short sides along the street frontage. In 1394, Bertram Montbucher held a tenement in the South Bailey which lay in length from the road as far as the castle wall. Others, like those on the Placea, seem to have had their longer side to the street. Joan Dragon held a tenement in the South Bailey in 1314 which was 42 feet long next to the road and 32 feet wide. Richard Raket's land in Owengate lay next to the castle wall extending from the bishop's tower as far as the North Gate (1452). The dimensions of several tenements in the street were given in the deeds, as, for example, the tenement of Ralph, rector of the church in the South Bailey, which was 26 feet wide and 64 feet long (1303). Thomas Dale's placea in the North Bailey was described in 1448 in precise terms. Its breadth was 7 virgates and its length, 19½ virgates. It was obviously more important to give the exact measurements of pieces of land like this which might be acquired to give the tenant easier access to the castle walls.

Speed’s plan of 1611 shows that the Bailey was built up along its full length, with the exception of the north-west side of the South Bailey, which was bounded by the wall of the monastic precinct. Many deeds refer to buildings contained within tenements in this street or to building activity on tenements. The land of Gwydon Cementarius in the North Bailey had houses built on it in 1297, but after the priory acquired it in the 1380s, there was considerable rebuilding on the land. 1 John de Hagthorp’s placea had been built upon by 1418 and it was enclosed with stone walls. 2 Several houses in the street were obviously large and substantial structures with solars and cellars, like Joan Dragon’s house in the South Bailey. 3 Robert Harlesay granted John Chaloner a new chamber, cellar and solar built in the garden of his messuage in the South Bailey in 1416. 4 One of the most impressive buildings in the area was the house held by Jordan de Claxton in Lygate which in 1284 contained a great hall with a chamber, and several other rooms including a solar and cellar and outbuildings. 5 John Dale conveyed to his brother, Thomas, a house with a solar, cellar and garderobe in the North Bailey in 1447. 6 Some houses had their own names, many of which were inherited probably from previous holders of the land. Lightfoothouse on the east side of the North Bailey was perhaps the most notable example. 7 It had changed its name to Sheriffhouse by 1365, perhaps as a result of being acquired by members of the famous de la Pole family.

The Almoner held several tenements on the west side of the North Bailey with the curious name of Halfeten. 8 It has been suggested that this name derived from the overhanging half-seters of the upper storey of a timber-framed house. 9 There is slight evidence of some shops or stalls in the street, particularly in the Lygate/Kingsgate area at what might have been an important cross roads for traffic in the Bailey. 9

There were several notable public buildings and structures in the Bailey, not least being the gates in the castle walls. Little is known about Kingsgate and Owengate beyond their mention in deeds, but the South Gate seems to have been a very insignificant defensive feature by the 15th century. In 1449, the bishop gave Robert Rodes licence to annex it to his mansio. It was described as porticula and Rodes was given the right of free entry and exit through the gate. The North Gate was an altogether different matter, being the principal gate of the castle and the one with the most sophisticated defensive arrangements. A barbican was constructed there in the early 14th century, which necessitated the demolition of neighbouring tenements in the North Bailey. In May 1313, the bishop ordered an enquiry into the value of the messuages of John de Pollowe and the rector of St. Mary's church in the North Bailey, which had been cleared for this new defensive work. Rooms within the gate itself seem to have been leased out to tenants before its conversion into a gaol by Bishop Langley in the early 15th century.

The gate of the abbey formed the boundary between two parishes as well as two streets, those of St. Mary, North Bailey and St. Mary, South Bailey. There were two parish churches in the street, one sited at the corner of the North Bailey and Kingsgate and the other on the north-west of the South Bailey just beyond the abbey precincts. The North Bailey church came to be called St. Mary-le-Bow, apparently because the tower at its west end straddled the Bailey road, a feature which is shown on Speed's map of Durham. One interesting surviving document concerns an argument between the priory and the bishop over a right of way which passed beneath this tower. The prior had tried to enforce his right to close the gate under the tower against the bishop's men, but the bishop argued that he required access to the castle walls at all times for defensive purposes. The Belasys family endowed a chantry to St. Katherine within this church and the rector seems to have held a number of properties in the street.

evidence about St. Mary's church in the South Bailey, sometimes called St. Mary-the-Less, survives. The advowson of the church was the property of the Neville family in the 15th. century: Ralph, earl of Westmorland, died seised of the advowson of the church in 1509. 1

Rents from some tenements in the South Bailey were assigned to maintain lights before altars within the church, like 2s. p. a. from the tenement of Emma de le Orcheyard in 1303. 2 The rector of the church also held several properties in both the North and South Baileys. 3

Other buildings of a religious significance in the Bailey were the infirmary, Mawdeleyngildhous and le Mavsondieu or Domus Del. References to the position of the Mawdeleyngildhous survive in deeds concerning tenements on the east side of the North Bailey. Thomas Dale's placea was the site of Mawdeleyngildhous (1448), but by the mid-14th. century, this house may have disappeared, although the name lived on. 4 It may have been a guild house associated with St. Mary Magdalen church and hospital on the west side of St. Giles' street. 5 Le Mavsondieu was sited possibly on the south side of the South Bailey. The earliest surviving reference to it occurs in the Bursar’s rental of 1347 and throughout the medieval period it was part of his estate. Described as a house, it was held by Thomas Foster in 1517 and returned a rent of 12d. p. a. 6 The infirmary was sited opposite the gate to the abbey precinct and it was part of the Almoner's estate. Land was granted to the priory by Richard Ingeniator specifically for the establishment of a hospital to accommodate the poor, and by the mid-15th. century, several rooms within it seem to have been occupied by widows. 7 The Almoner also held a school here in the 15th. century and the master of the school was accommodated in one of its chambers. 8

The Sacrist leased out tenements and rooms along the east side of the abbey precinct to his tenants. One of his tenements was called le Leydyhouse. 9 The rent from this tenement was paid not only in money, but also in 4 lbs. of wax to maintain two large candles burning before St. Mary's altar next to the bishop's stall in the cathedral; hence, presumably, the name of this house. The Almoner had a workshop along this part of the street, called a Warehouse in 1501 and Lymehouse in 1542, and a stable for his horses which, in 1533, was leased to Robert Hertburn, chaplain, for 2s. p.a. 1

The street and its offshoots do not seem to have been highly industrialised, although representatives of several trades like carpenters, cooks, brewers, butchers, a glover and a plumber lived there during the middle ages. There was also brewing equipment in at least one priory tenement in the South Bailey and one in the North Bailey. In 1516, the tenement of John Barnard contained one "brewleyd", one "tapstone" and one "stepleyd". 2 The Sacrist leased a tenement in the North Bailey to Nicholas Dixson which contained two vasa plumbia called a "stepelede" and a "brewlede" (1470). 3 No one trade seems to have predominated in this street. However, there were two categories of occupants of tenements here which were not found elsewhere in Durham in such numbers. First, there were many representatives of county families, the landed gentry such as the Claxtons, the Darcys, the Bowes and the Nevill families occupying houses in the street. 4 It is likely that they used their Bailey houses only for special occasions when summoned by the bishop to Durham, for example, for meetings of his council or in wartime. They were probably simply used as an urban base for these families and their retainers. The second major category of people in the Bailey was those who were officials or servants of the bishop or of the prior. These ranged from the wealthy and important members of the bishop's or the prior's council, like Robert Rodes, John Lound (Bishop Nevill's vicar general) and John de Hagthorp, Bishop Hatfield's clerk, who held land in the South Bailey and on the Placea, 5 to men like William Howlot who was the groom of the prior's stable and who held a tenement in the South Bailey in 1507. 6 Other priory servants were Michael de Melsanby, the abbey baker, and Thomas Gardener of the abbey who also held land in the South Bailey in the late 13th century. 7 Several of these servants had their rent payments allowed as part of their stipends. These men obviously needed to live close to their work, and they were often rewarded with land or rents in the Bailey.

Most of the tenements in this street seem to have been held directly from the bishop during the medieval period. For example, the three tenements of Robert Sotheron in the South Bailey, acquired by the prior in 1461, were held from the bishop, as was the holding of the Claxton family in the street. However, it is clear that some tenants in the South Bailey held their land from the priory. Master William de Farnham's tenement in the South Bailey, acquired by the priory in 1383, was found on enquiry to be held from the prior. Small rents, like landmale rents, but not called such in this area, were owed by tenants to the bishop and were paid at his exchequer on the Placea. These rents ranged in size between 1d., owed by Gilbert Elvet for his garden in Owengate, and 3s., owed by the Almoner in 1382 for Sheriffhouses. Some freehold rents were paid to priory obedientiaries in the street; the Almoner drew rent from the tenement of Alan Cuthbert in the South Bailey in the 14th. century (14d.) and from the archdeacon's house in the North Bailey (2s. 4d.), for example. However, where the priory managed to acquire land in the street, freehold rents were often owed to private families, like the 3s. p.a. owed by the Almoner to the Bassett family for the tenements lying opposite the east end of the cathedral. Some priory servants owed other rents called soulsilver, a rent paid, it appears, for land held in the South Bailey. There is one surviving example of a rent called Meysondieu silver, paid by Richard Robynson for his tenement in the South Bailey in 1517 (3s.), which may have been diverted for the upkeep of the Meysondieu. It is clear from some of the surviving rentals that many rents were not paid in money at all. The widow of John Lyghtfott paid off part of her rent owed for a tenement in the South Bailey by "blechyng of hardyn" and "mossledyng". James Nicholl had an allowance of 20d. made from his rent of 5s. for providing a calf for the abbey kitchen, and Cuthbert Martin paid part of his rent of 9s. in carrying coal for the prior in 1507. 1

The priory managed to acquire some tenements outright in these streets during the later middle ages. The messuage in Owengate once held by Geoffrey Yekemond was acquired in 1388 and Nicholas Molendinarius' tenement in the South Bailey was acquired in the 1340s. 2 These tenements were then leased out to tenants at a higher, fluctuating rent which brought increased revenue for the priory. Nicholas Molendinarius' tenement, for example, rendered the small freehold rent of 14d. a. to the Almoner before it came into the priory's holding. After its acquisition, it was divided into two parts and leased at rents of 7s. a. for each part in 1424. Overall, however, the priory's legal and financial stake in the Bailey was small, relative to the holdings of the bishop and the private families. By the early 16th century, the priory drew rents from 66 tenements in the street which probably represented only a small proportion of the total number of properties in the street. Nonetheless, those tenements the priory acquired were valuable; its rent income, particularly that of the Bursar, from this street was high.

Perhaps the most significant feature of landholding in the Bailey was the obligation to perform military service which was laid on certain tenants. There were various types of military service. Some tenants held their land on condition that they provided a chamber and stabling for several horses whenever the overlord of the tenement needed it. In 1244, Ralph de Amundevill leased his land in the South Bailey to the Sacrist on condition that propter guerram urgentem Wardam facere in ballio, Ralph would have stabling for eight horses provided by the Sacrist. 3 Other tenants had to perform castle ward duties by guarding a portion of the walls and gates as Robert Rodes did as a condition of his annexing the South Gate. 4 Robert Darcy held land in Durham including seven messuages in the Bailey, by service of guarding the North Gate of the castle in wartime with the bishop's janitor (1416). ¹

There is some evidence to suggest that certain parts of the Bailey were less prosperous or popular than others. Several tenements along the edge of the abbey precinct in the North Bailey were lying waste by the 1530s. ² A messuage leased to John Lounde in the South Bailey in 1452 was described as being ruinorum and several of the Almoner's tenements in Owengate were waste in 1424. ³ However, to counterbalance this evidence, there are signs of rebuilding in the street at least by the priory obedientiaries, who subdivided several tenements and drew more rents from one holding. ⁴

Fewer tenements were in the hands of chantries or religious guilds in this street than, for example, in Crossgate of Fleshewegate. Apart from those rents and tenements which, it has been noted, were diverted to maintain the churches in the streets, few rents supported chantries elsewhere. The tenements on the corner of Owengate maintained a chaplain at Ferry (14s. 6d. a.) and a rent from a tenement held by Adam Bett in the South Bailey was diverted to maintain a chaplain at Redmarshall (3s. 12d. a.). ⁵ The chapel of St. Leonard benefitted from a 6d. rent from a tenement in the South Bailey, and St. James' chapel on Elvet Bridge derived a rent of 10s. 6d. a. from another tenement in the South Bailey in 1313. ⁶ Finchale priory held tenements in Lygate, among which was the large hall-house of Jordan de Claxton. ⁷

There is no surviving complete list of tenements in this street, nor of the complete holdings of any one landholder except the priory. The second Receivers' Book, used in conjunction with the rentals of various priory obedientiaries and surviving deeds, provides a detailed history of a few tenements. The rest of the street remains obscure and there are serious gaps in the tenement plan and in the following street guide. In the guide, rental entries and groups of deeds have been arranged in their approximate order along the street line. Within

5. BARONY OF OLD ELVET
Tenements which were situated in this part of Durham were usually described by reference to the jurisdictional area in which they lay rather than a road name. Thus, the deeds refer to land lying in Old Elvet or in the barony of Old Elvet from the late 13th. to the 16th. century. Some of the earliest surviving deeds describe tenements as being in Elvet Superior, no doubt referring to the higher or upper area of settlement around the church. While the Latin form of Old Elvet is most common in the deeds, there are occasional examples of its English translation, like Auldelvet or Aldelvet. The street which divided Old Elvet from New Elvet did have a specific name: Ratonrawe. The variant spellings of this name are discussed in the introduction to the street guide to New Elvet. By the 15th. century, the street which led to the church of St. Oswald had acquired the name Kirkgate.

Several 14th. century deeds are endorsed with this name, but in a much later hand. The earliest surviving deed which incorporates the name in its description of a tenement is dated 1426, although it is also found in the Almoner's rental of 1424.

The area which was called Old Elvet or Elvet Barony in the medieval period extended from Ratonrawe (modern Court Lane) on its north side towards the south. It was never described as a borough in the surviving documents. It had the River Wear as its western boundary and the manor of Elvethall with its demesne lands to the east. Outside the urban area, which did not go far beyond St. Oswald's church and the manor buildings, crofts and tofts merged into the fields of Old Elvet. These arable fields, some of which had names, like Swallopleys and Mountjoy, were held by priory obedientiaries like the Commoner and the Hostillar and leased out to tenants.
St. Oswald's church also held land in these fields, as did some private families like the Chaunceller family. These fields extended to the slopes of Elvet wood and Malden Castle.

The main road through Old Elvet in the later middle ages was a continuation of the road through New Elvet from Elvet bridge, rising gradually towards the south. It divided into two parts midway through the urban area. One road, the main route, passed Elvethall manor as it headed south-east towards Shincliffe bridge and Stockton. In contemporary deeds, tenements along this road were said to lie by "the road towards Elvethall". The other part of the road seems to have been considerably narrower. It rose steeply to the church and cemetery of St. Oswald and headed south-west towards Sunderland bridge and Darlington. Tenements along this road were described as being by "the road to St. Oswald's church" or in Kirkgate, by the mid-15th century. A number of subsidiary streets, lanes or vennels connected different parts of Old Elvet. Ratonrawe was an important street linking Old Elvet with the main road through New Elvet borough. It probably carried a considerable amount of traffic not only between the two Elvet settlements but also to the countryside beyond, to Scaltok mill and Shincliffe vill.

A narrow lane or vennel connected the street leading to Elvethall manor with St. Oswald's church and cemetery. It was called le Kirkchare in some deeds, and William Robynson, who held the burgage next to it from 1523, had the responsibility of looking after it. He was allowed 6d. of his annual rent of 10s., owed to the Hostillar, pro purgatione venelli. Several small lanes seem to have led down from the west side of Old Elvet street towards the river. In 1343, Cuthbert, son of William de Brumptofft, held a tenement which lay next to the vennel to the River Wear.

Most of the tenements in these streets seem to have extended back in length from the street frontage to the boundaries of Old Elvet.
Tenements on the west side of Old Elvet street and Kirkgate, like that of Ralph, son of Michael de Castro Bernardi in 1346, extended in length from the road to the river. Tenements on the east side of Kirkgate stretched back from Kirkgate as far as the road leading to Elvethall manor. In 1359, Goslyn Surteys held a tenement in Kirkgate which lay "from one road as far as another" and Robert de Portyat's tenement abutted the road leading to St. Oswald's church at one head and the road leading to Elvethall at the other. Few dimensions of plots of land in Old Elvet are given in the deeds, but Robert de Belford's tenement in Kirkgate was said to be 19 feet broad and 27 feet long in 1331 and Margaret de Ecclesia's placea near Elvethall manor was 15 roods long and 23 feet broad.

Speed's plan of Durham in c.1611 shows that these streets were built up continuously as far as the church and Elvethall manor to the south. Beyond these points, buildings become more sporadic and the area loses its urban aspect. The medieval deeds confirm this picture. Many tenements in Kirkgate and in the northern part of Old Elvet were described as containing buildings. On the west side of Old Elvet, Nicholas Tannator held a tenement with buildings and a garden (1332), while John de Whitton's two curtilages opposite St. Oswald's church had been built on by 1422. On the outer fringes of Old Elvet, however, few buildings are mentioned in the deeds and it is much more common to find tofts or crofts, placea or curtilages. Margaret de Ecclesia held a placea on the north side of the street near Elvethall manor in 1305, while the land to the south of St. Oswald's cemetery is described as a toft and a croft in the late 13th. century. Thomas Aspour held land "at the end of Old Elvet" in the 15th. century and his tenement, called le Shepcotgarth, contained a barn and a garden in 1417.

A few domestic buildings in these streets are described in some detail in the deeds. Stephen le Hauberger quitclaimed his interest in land on "le Hill" in Old Elvet to the Almoner in the late 13th. century.

This land contained a hall (aula), as did the tenement in Ratonrawe held by John, son of Roys. John's hall formed the boundary of his holding, excepting the cellar which, it was said, stood outside the posts of the hall. The vicar of St. Oswald's church had his mansio in Kirkgate next to the church, probably on the site of the present vicarage. The Almoner differentiated between those of his eight tenements on "Ile Hill!", to the west of Old Elvet street, which had stone roofs and those which were thatched. In 1424, five had thatched roofs and three were of stone, but it seems to have made no appreciable difference to the size of the leasehold rents the Almoner drew from his tenements. The eighth tenement contained a shop, the only reference which has been found to commercial activity in the area. It may be significant that a new chimney is mentioned as being a feature of one of the Almoner's tenements near Elvethall manor in 1424. Perhaps it was rarely found in Old Elvet's domestic architecture and as such merited special reference.

There are only two buildings in the street which can qualify to be called "public" buildings. One is the church of St. Oswald in the south-west part of the urban area. It may have been one of the earliest buildings in Durham and, indeed, it has been argued, on the evidence of pieces of Anglo-Saxon crosses found in the tower, that it may have predated settlement on the peninsula itself. The church was in Durham cathedral priory's holding from the 12th. century and its parish encompassed most of Durham's urban area. Until the mid-15th. century, when St. Margaret's chapel was licensed to administer the full sacraments of the church, all the inhabitants of the Old Borough as well as those of Old and New Elvet had to attend St. Oswald's church for the sacraments of baptism, marriage and burial, and mortuary payments were owed to the vicar, which was a source of great grievance and many court cases. The church contained two chantries, that of St. Mary, founded probably in the late 13th. century by Ralph, a chaplain of the church, and augmented by bequests such as that of William Alman in the late 14th. century; and that of St. John the Baptist and St. John the Evangelist, founded and endowed by the Elvet brothers, a family of clerks living in the area, in the early 15th century. Two parish guilds, the guild of St. Oswald and the guild of the Holy Trinity, were associated with the church. St. Oswald's church was probably a centre of community life in this part of Durham.

A second "public" building or buildings in Old Elvet, were those associated with Elvethall manor. This manor was part of the Hostiller's estate, and the success of his operation here has been charted by Dr. Lomas. There was a hall within the manor buildings to which the Hostiller's tenants in this area came to pay their rents, to do fealty and to have their grievances heard. The church and the manor headquarters may have formed the original focus of settlement in the area, on high ground raised above the land which might be vulnerable to flooding by the river. Settlement may have spread down the hill from here towards the north, especially after the building of Elvet bridge improved communications with the bishop's borough. Before this bridge was built, it is likely that the inhabitants of Old Elvet crossed to the peninsula and so to Durham's market place by way of a ford over the river to Kingsgate. However, by the 15th century, this ford seems to have been replaced by a bridge, the mysterious Boubrig which is mentioned in the endorsements to some deeds. The tenement of Alice Ra on the west side of Old Elvet was said to lie "opposite Boubrigyde" and Joan Bosse held a tenement super Boubrig in 1425.

There is little surviving evidence to suggest that there was any concentration of industrial activity in Old Elvet, although there are references to representatives of most of the major medieval trades living here during the middle ages. Nicholas de Crathorn, a tanner and burgess of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, held a tenement on the west side of Old Elvet in 1331, while William de Castro, skinner, held land in Kirkgate in 1334. John Blaunke, tailor, held land near Elvethall manor in 1343, while Robert Weddale, dyer, acquired several tenements in the area in 1460, although it is not clear that he lived in any of them. A tenement in Kirkgate was occupied by several generations of smiths. 1 Robert de Belford, smith, acquired the tenement in 1313 and granted it to William, son of Hugh de Heddelam, smith, in 1331. William, in turn, granted it to John de Percebrigg, smith, in 1378, and in 1453 it was held by Richard Lomley, smith. There were kilns (torala) on the fringes of the urban area, and one tenement contained a wide variety of lead and wood vessels, perhaps for use in brewing. 2

Tenements in Old Elvet were held from the priory in burgage, and the Hostillar was overlord of the whole area. Small landmale rents were owed by all tenants to him and they were paid to the Hostillar in Elvethall manor. These rents varied considerably in size from $2\frac{1}{2}$d., which was owed by the chaplain of St. Mary's chantry in St. Oswald's church for a burgage on the east side of the street, to 3s. which the heirs of William Hefeld owed for a close on the south side of Ratonrawe. 3 They were fixed. Although the Hostillar was the overlord, he did not hold all the freeholds of land in the streets. By 1523, the Almoner drew freehold rents from 13 tenements and the Commoner held the freeholds of 8 tenements. 4 Finchale priory drew one freehold rent from a tenement on the west side of Kirkgate 5 and several freeholds remained in private hands throughout the period. The Hostillar acquired some of these tenements during the period, but not necessarily the freehold interest in them. In 1482, for example, the Hostillar acquired land opposite St. Oswald's church from Robert Banys. 6 It was charged with a freehold rent of 12d. p.a. to the Almoner which continued, being paid by the Hostillar after 1482.

The priory and, in particular, the Hostillar, increased its legal and financial stake in Old Elvet by purchasing tenements there throughout the period. The Master of the Infirmary acquired a tenement near Elvethall manor from William de Langley in 1385. 7 He paid Langley 13s. 4d. in 1385, and the legal costs involved in the conveyance amounted to 14s. 4d. in 1386. The Hostiller acquired William Alman’s large estate in Old and New Elvet in 1392. He received 45s. 9½d. from these tenements in 1392, but this was less than he might have expected because the principal tenement in Kirkgate was occupied by William’s widow, Matilda, for her life.¹ By 1396, when this tenement was incorporated into the Hostiller’s estate, he received 53s. 8d. for the land. The tenements acquired in this way could be leased out by the priory for higher, fluctuating leasehold rents. Swalloples, an area of arable land amounting to 10 acres in the fields of Old Elvet, was acquired by the Commoner in the mid-14th. century.² In 1368, he leased it for a rent of 25s. 7½d. p.s.a., rising to 40s. p.s.a. in 1382, a level which was maintained until at least 1423. By 1477, the rent had fallen to 33s. 4d. p.s.a., but it remained at this amount until 1542. The Hostiller, in particular, benefitted from his leasehold income in Old Elvet. In 1523, he drew approximately 59 leasehold rents from a total of 99 rents payable in this part of Durham.

There is little evidence for any waste tenements in Old Elvet during the period, or of many tenants who fell into rent arrears over a long period. In 1424, one of the Almoner’s tenements on the west side of Old Elvet was lying waste, and William Aspour’s land at the end of Old Elvet beyond Elvethall manor was described as a waste tenement in 1470.³ A tenement in the same street, which owed a freehold rent to the Master of the Infirmary, was waste by 1470 and this may be connected with the fact that its freehold rent of 10d. p.s.a. was unpaid for several years in the early 15th. century.⁴ There are no obvious signs of decline in the level of leasehold rents at any particular period nor does there seem to have been a shrinking of the urban area by 1500 as there was, for example, in Alvertongate and Crossgate.

Some tenants in Old Elvet paid their rents, or part of them, in kind, usually in contributions of cloth to the Hostiller or in autumn work or other agricultural services on his Elvethall manor. He may have relied heavily on such commutations of rent to boost the regular labour force at harvest-time. John Bergett was allowed 3s. 8d. of his

Apart from those tenements which were held by Durham cathedral priory’s obedientiaries, several tenements in Old Elvet were held by other ecclesiastical bodies like Finchale priory. The vicar of St. Oswald’s church held other land in Kirkgate apart from his mansio; St. Mary’s chantry in the church held 13 tenements in Old Elvet and St. John the Baptist’s chantry held a messuage opposite St. Oswald’s cemetery. The Corpus Christi guild in St. Nicholas’ church held a messuage on the west side of Old Elvet. Only a small minority of tenements in this part of Durham were not in the possession of the religious by 1523. Out of the total number of 99 rents listed in the Hostillar’s rental for Old Elvet, only about 13 were freehold rents derived from tenements which remained in the hands of the laity.

The surviving Hostillar’s rentals provide a complete list of his tenants and the rents paid to him in these streets between 1523 and 1533. The second Receivers’ Book of 1542 also contains a comprehensive list of priory tenants including the names of those who held land from other priory obedientiaries. All these rentals include the names of other individuals or religious groups holding tenements in Old Elvet, however, because each tenant owed some kind of rent to the priory, even if it was only a landmale rent. Unfortunately, it has proved impossible to link the majority of surviving deeds with these 16th. century entries, mainly because of the absence of any other Hostillar’s rentals before 1523, but also because few 15th. century deeds or leases remain. Consequently, the long break in the history of tenure of most individual tenements has made it difficult to locate the deeds with a specific tenement on a street plan.

The west side of Old Elvet and Kirkgate are the best documented areas, chiefly because several tenements here were held by the Almoner. The surviving Almoner's rentals give a better coverage of tenure for the whole period. The following street guide for these areas of Old Elvet is almost complete and follows fairly closely the order of tenants in the 16th century rentals. Elsewhere, the coverage is patchy, and only those cases where a group of deeds can be tied closely to a 16th century rental entry make an appearance in the street guide. The following guide begins at the northern end of Old Elvet, on the west side of the street, and continues southwards as far as St. Oswald's church. It proceeds along the east side of Kirkgate, from south to north, and so along the south side of the road to Elvethall manor. The north side of this road follows, and then a group of deeds concerning a property on the south side of Ratonrawe. After a section devoted to land in the fields of Old Elvet, the guide ends with a large group of miscellaneous deeds, subdivided into (a) Kirkgate, (b) Old Elvet and (c) the fields of Old Elvet.

6. BOROUGH OF NEW ELVET
BOROUGH OF NEW ELVET

Tenements which were situated in this part of Durham were usually described by referring to the jurisdictional area in which they lay rather than a road name, as they were in Old Elvet. Thus the deeds and rentals refer to land lying in the borough of Elvet or in New Elvet from the late 13th century to the 16th century. Some of the earliest surviving deeds describe tenements lying in Elveth, but the name Elvetehalge which occurs in Bishop Puiset's charter to his burgesses in this borough does not recur in the later sources. The street which formed the southern boundary of the borough did have a specific name, however. The most common form of this name found in the surviving deeds is Ratonrawe. It occurs as early as 1317 and it is the form used in the Sacrist's rental of 1500. Another common variant of the name is Ratunrawe, found mainly in the 14th century. In the Gazetteer the spelling Ratonrawe will be used throughout.

The boundaries of the borough of Elvet, or New Elvet, were clearly established from the earliest days of the settlement and they appear in Prior Bertram's charter to the burgesses of his "new borough". In this charter, dating from between 1188 to 1208, the borough was said to begin at the passage beside the house of the abbot of Newminster and to extend on the north towards Scaltok mill. In physical terms, this borough had the River Wear as its north, west and east boundaries. On the south side, a lane, later known as Water Lane, and Ratonrawe, later Court Lane, formed its boundary with the barony of Old Elvet. The tenements on the north side of Ratonrawe lay in the borough and those on the south were part of the barony. Beyond the urban area, to the south-east, tenements merged into crofts and open spaces around Scaltok mill and as far as the wooded slopes of Maiden Castle. The borough also included a large open grazing area of about 30 acres called Smethalgh. This spelling of the name of the field is perhaps the most common at any period in the documents, but variants are Smetehalh, Smethalgh, le Smythflat and Smythalgh. 1 This area extended from the backs of tenements along the north side of New Elvet as far as the River Wear, and it was part of the Hostillar's estate, used by him to graze his own animals. Many cases of illegal grazing by the inhabitants of the borough came before the Hostillar's borough court and small fines were imposed on those whose animals strayed into Smethalgh. 2 The main road through the borough ran from Elvet bridge on the north branching immediately into two main arteries. One led south-west towards Old Elvet, St. Oswald's church and Stockton. The other ran towards the south-east and seems to have been the main route to Shincliffe hill and Scaltok mill. When this mill became derelict in the mid-15th century, however, this road may have lost some of its importance. Tenements along both branches of this road were said to lie in New Elvet, their positions being differentiated simply by the side of the road along which they lay. Tenements on the south-west branch of the road, for example, lay either on the west or east side of New Elvet.

There were a number of subsidiary streets and lanes in New Elvet. Most important of these was Ratonrawe, linking the two branches of the road from Elvet bridge as they ran southwards. It is described as via in some deeds. 3 A lane or vennel left the west side of the street of New Elvet and led to the Wear between the tenements.
In 1382, John Proktour held the tenement next to the vennel, on its north side, and paid the Bursar a rent of 20s. 4 Another vennel passed between the tenements on this side of the street, nearer to Elvet bridge, which was said to lead to the "water course" of the River Wear. 5 William Aspour granted the burgage which lay next to this vennel to Thomas Warwyk in 1465. 6 of New Elvet, a vennel on the north side, almost next to Elvet bridge, connected the street with the river. In 1335, John Alman held a house which was said to lie super pontem supra venellum. Further to the south, the Hostillar held a vennel which led from the road to his meadow of Smethalgh. He leased it to Hugh de Sadberygh in 1337 for a rent of 6d. p.a., and it was described as being 200 feet long and 11 feet wide. It appears on the sketch map of tenements in this part of the street, drawn between c.1439 and c.1442, by which time it had been blocked at its north end. It was no longer a right of way for the tenants and ceased to be a source of revenue for the Hostillar. None of these lanes or vennels, except Ratonrawe, seem to have been given any names in the medieval period.

The tenements in New Elvet seem to have extended back in length from the street frontage to the borough boundaries. Tenements along the north side of the street, like that which the Almoner leased to John de Foston in 1300, extended from the road as far as the Wear, while to the south, Adam de Stanhop's tenement abutted the road at one head and le Smythflat at the other (1339). Some tenements on the south side of New Elvet had gardens which abutted Ratonrawe. Thomas Tang held a burgage which fronted the main road of New Elvet but its garden at the end of the burgage abutted Ratonrawe (1425). Few dimensions of any tenements are given in the surviving deeds, but Isabel, widow of Nicholas Draper, held a placea in Ratonrawe which was 55 feet long and 30 feet broad. These dimensions suggest that tenements lay with their short sides to the street frontage, an impression which is reinforced by the admittedly schematic medieval map of tenements near Smethalgh.

Speed's plan of Durham of 1611 shows a continuous line of housing along the main roads of this borough as far as Ratonrawe. Along Ratonrawe and beyond it, to the south, the land seems to have become open and agricultural in aspect, merging into the fields surrounding the urban area. The medieval deeds confirm this picture. Many of the plots of land which are described as lying ad exitum ville or ad finem ville are waste burgages or crofts containing gardens and barns. John Britby held a waste burgage at the end of Elvet towards Scaltok in 1425 and a croft with a kiln and one acre of land adjoining it.¹ Several tenements along the north side of Ratonrawe contained barns and were described as ortos or curtilages.² In contrast, tenements near Elvet bridge contained buildings. In 1294, for example, John de Lewington held a burgage on the north side of the street which had buildings within it and a croft behind extending to the Wear.³

Few domestic buildings in New Elvet are described in any detail in the deeds, although some were obviously substantial town houses of the county gentry. In the early 16th. century, the Danby family held a principal burgage which contained a stone chamber, a curtilage, a gate and a chapel attached.⁴ Master Walter de Hadington had granted the Almoner his not inconsiderable house in the 13th. century. It had a camera de petra, houses, buildings and yardlands, all of stone, according to the Almoner's rental of 1424.⁵ They were a valuable asset for the priory. Two small houses had been built in Thomas Tangle's tenement in Ratonrawe by 1424 and William Aurlfaber's house in Ratonrawe had a gate, five feet wide, which gave access per medium domum.⁶ Another domestic building in the street which may have been of some size and importance was called Adthellingflethouses after the name of an early 14th.-century tenant.⁷ John de Wadley, a carpenter, leased a tenement on the north side of New Elvet from John de Burdon in 1397 on condition that he built a new house in the garden of the tenement at his own expense.⁸ Burdon gave Wadley two marks towards his expenses and he agreed to provide the large timbers for the house. The west part of the borough, being low-lying, was subject to flooding, and this accounts for the money spent by the Sacrist in building a wall in Beatrice Hunton's tenements there pro exclusione aquæ (1445).⁹

Indeed, archaeological excavations in the area led to the conclusion that flooding in the 14th. century was followed by the clearance and levelling of the site and the re-development of the area with burgage tenements fronting the street. The building of a river wall, possibly in the late 14th. century, prevented further flood damage and probably led to an increase of population in this part of the borough. These excavations also demonstrated that the 14th.-century houses in this area had stone walls with flagged floors and windows. They contained privies as an integral part of the structure of the house.

There were a few "public" buildings of some importance in the street, not least the bridge at its north end. This bridge, constructed by Bishop Puisset at the end of the 12th. century, had shops and stalls probably above its land arches. John Alman held a shop or a booth as well as a house _super pontem_ and the early 14th.-century Bursars' rentals list several small rents paid by tenants holding booths on the bridge. St. Andrew's chapel, founded possibly during the late 13th. century by Absalon de Coldingham, was built at the east end of the bridge and endowed with several tenements clustering around the bridgehead.

There was a common bakehouse or oven in the street, situated along its west side near the vennel to the Wear (modern Water Lane). This _pistrinum_ or _furnum_ was part of the Bursars' estate, and rents ranging from 6s. 8d. _p. a._ in 1340 to 26s. 8d. in 1517 were paid to him by the farmers of the oven. There was a forge near Elvet bridge, on the north side of the street. It was held, with a house, by Geoffrey Marescallus in 1335 and it owed a rent of 5s. _p. a._ to the Almoner. The mill used by Elvet tenants before the mid-15th. century was situated by the river beyond the urban area of New Elvet. It was called Scaltok mill and a number of variant spellings of the name exist in the deeds. In the 13th. century, the forms _Schaltok_, _Schaltou_, _Scaltoc_, and _Scalcot_ are found. By the 15th. century, the variant Scaltokmylne is used. This mill fell into disuse by the mid-15th century as the river altered course slightly, and the priory transferred its milling operations for tenants to the mill at the south end of South Street.

Apart from St. Andrew's chantry chapel, there was no church in the borough, but the parish church of St. Oswald in Old Elvet was within easy distance for all the borough inhabitants. One guild which was attached to St. Oswald's church had its guild house on the corner of New Elvet borough, at the point where the roads branched off to the south-east and south-west. In 1472, the prior leased three waste burgages to the brothers of the guild of the Trinity so that they could build a house there. The Hostillar retained some hold over the premises, however. He and his servants were to have free entry and exit to and from this house which they could use as a borough court house whenever necessary.

There is little evidence for any concentration of industrial activity in this borough, although there are a number of references to kilns (toralia) in tenements in the street. In 1296, Richard Lanerd's tenement beside Smethalgh contained a lime kiln and a malt kiln, and Thomas de Britby's kiln at the end of the vill became part of the Hostillar's estate by the 1380s. In Ratonrawe, Simon Alman held a kiln in the late 14th century which had the name Simondeskilne. It became part of the Feretrar's estate, but by 1500 it was lying waste. Most of the main groups of medieval trades had representatives living in the street during the medieval period. There were some metal workers here, not only Geoffrey Marescallus who held the forge near Elvet bridge, but also Edward Dennyng, smith, who held a tenement on the north side of the street in 1523 and Thomas Murrok, smith, who had several tenements in the street including in Ratonrawe. Cloth workers living in New Elvet included Simon, son of Richard de Elvet, tailor, who held the tenement near Smethalgh in the late 13th century, and William de Furneys, draper, who held a tenement on the south side of the street in 1380. The butchers William, son of Walter de Esshe, who held a tenement on the north side of New Elvet in the early 14th century, and John Bacon, butcher, whose tenement was on the west side near the bridge, represent the victualling trades. The mercers Adam de Stanhop and Robert othe Howe lived here in 1339 but it does not seem to have been a popular location for the merchant class of Durham in comparison with the bishop's borough.

Tenements in New Elvet were held from the priory in burgage. When Robert Laton's burgage was acquired by the priory in 1477, it was found on inquiry to be held in burgage by services of 3s. 2d. to the prior's exchequer and suit of court. The Hostillar was the overlord of the borough, and all tenants owed him small landmale rents. These ranged in size from 1d. 2d. which Roger Malefet owed for his burgage on the north side of the borough in 1294, to 20d. 2d. which Robert Preston's burgage near Elvet bridge owed, and these rents were fixed. Although the Hostillar was overlord, he did not hold all the freeholds of tenements in the borough. Some freeholds were held by other priory obedientiaries, like the Almoner, who held at least ten, the Bursar, who held about seven, and the Sacrist, who held three. Several chantries, like St. Andrew's chapel, St. Mary's chantry in St. Nicholas' church and St. Mary's chantry at Pittington, held freeholds here, and a number were in private hands. Even though the priory managed to acquire some of these tenements during the period, the freeholds often continued to be paid to others. Simon Alman's tenement next to Elvet bridge, for example, was charged with a freehold rent to Blanchland abbey of 15s. 2d. The priory acquired this tenement c. 1380, and it became part of the Feretrar's and later the Hostillar's estate in the street. However, the 15s. rent continued to be paid to Blanchland up to 1528.

The priory, and in particular the Hostillar, increased its legal and financial interest in the borough by purchasing tenements throughout the period. In 1377, for example, the Hostillar paid 104s. for William Heswell's land near Smethalgh and in 1376 the Bursar paid John de Killyingall 106s. 8d. for any right he had to a tenement next to the vennel on the west side of New Elvet. Tenements acquired in this way could be leased out for a higher, fluctuating rent. The Hostillar acquired two burgages from Marion Thomson in 1482 which gave him the additional income of 24s. 2d. in 1487. By 1523, he had leased out the tenements for rents of 16s. and 13s. 4d. The Sacrist's tenement on the west of New Elvet was leased out for 13s. 4d. in 1374 and for 14s. by 1500. The Hostillar, of all the priory obedientiaries, benefitted from the profits to be made by leaseholds in New Elvet. In 1523, he drew approximately twenty-three leasehold rents from a total of 106 rents payable in New Elvet.

A number of rents in this borough, as in Old Elvet, were paid by tenants in goods or in services to the overlord rather than in money. Autumn work, presumably on Elvethall manor, was performed by Richard Sorby for his tenement and by William Prowd in 1523. Alexander Pykeryng owed the Hostillar 3s. 4d. for his burgage in the street. He paid off 22d. of it in autumn work and 21d. in le Ralynq at Maiden Castle. In contrast, William Morefelde provided the Hostillar with one stedye de ferro as part of his rent. Some tenants owed soul-silver, which was deducted from their total rent payments. John Cowper owed rents of 14s. for a tenement on the east side and 14s. for a tenement on the north side and he paid 2s. 4d. for each tenement in soulsilver in 1508.

There were several waste tenements in New Elvet at most times during the middle ages. A waste burgage near the bridge was turned into gardens by 1507 and it was called an ortus by 1523. Thomas Murrook held a waste tenement in Ratonrawe in 1332 and he had been in arrears of a rent owed to the Almoner for many years.

the waste tenements in the street were, however, rebuilt. A waste placea in Ratonrawe was rebuilt after it had been acquired by the priory in the late 14th. century, and some leases specified that the tenements had to be built on as part of the conditions of tenure. However, it is clear from the evidence that more waste tenements existed in certain parts of the borough than in others, and that these were not repaired. These areas were the north side of New Elvet, near the bridge, the south end of the borough towards Scaltok, and Ratonrawe. Here, open spaces predominated and it may be that the urban area was shrinking by the 16th. century as it was on the outskirts of the Old Borough.

Several chantries and religious guilds held a number of properties in the street as well as rents which they drew from others. St. Mary's chantry in St. Nicholas' church held two tenements near the bridge. St. John the Baptist chantry in St. Oswald's church held one and St. Andrew's chapel had several properties at the bridgehead. The guild of the Crucifix in St. Oswald's church held at least three tenements and the guild of the Trinity, one. By 1523, only a small minority of tenements in New Elvet were not in the possession of the religious. Out of 106 rents paid in New Elvet, only thirty-nine were freeholds in private hands.

As in Old Elvet, the Hostiller's rentals and the second Receivers' book contain a comprehensive list of those holding land in this borough between 1523 and 1542. Again, it has proved impossible to link all of the surviving deeds with these 16th-century entries, mainly because of the absence of Hostiller's rental's before 1523 and also because few 15th-century deeds remain. Consequently, there is a long break in the history of tenure of most tenements and it is difficult to locate the tenements accurately in a street plan. The north side of New Elvet and the north side of Ratonrawe are the best documented areas, because several tenements were within the estates of the Almoner for whom a better series of rentals survives. Here the street guide which follows is almost complete and follows fairly closely the 16th. century rentals.

However, in the remaining areas, the coverage is extremely patchy and there are many gaps in the street line. Only in those cases where a group of deeds can be tied closely to a 16th-century rental entry has any attempt been made to incorporate it in the main street guide. The guide begins at Elvet bridge, and proceeds along the north and then the south side of New Elvet. It then turns the corner opposite the bridge and continues along the east side of New Elvet and the north side of Ratonrawe, working from west to east. Finally, it follows the west side of New Elvet and so returns to the bridge. A large group of miscellaneous deeds then follows, subdivided into (a) those relating to the north side of New Elvet; (b) those relating to the south side of New Elvet; and (c) the remainder, arranged in chronological order.
