Altered State: The Story of Ecstasy Culture and Acid House by Matthew Collin
Thank you for taking part in this performance of Temporary Autonomous Zone. You have been asked because of your expertise in and knowledge of a certain genre and culture and your talent as a DJ, post-producer and theorist. Below are a set of guidelines for the structuring of your performance (to be considered by all DJs), followed by a set of cultural references, unique to the segment of the performance that you have agreed to perform. You will also be provided with an explanation as to why I have chosen the themes of the segments to be included in Temporary Autonomous Zone. Please consider these guidelines and references carefully when you are structuring your segment.
GUIDELINES

Please do not feel the need to plan your set exactly. As DJs, we all know it is important to react to the audiences that we are dealing with. Every audience is specific and every performance will be different from the last. This is the essence of “the art of the DJ”. I would suggest bringing carefully curated USBs, Vinlys or computer playlists and reacting to the crowd within the restrictions of the music that you have brought.

There is no rule as to what medium you should use. There will be 2 x CDJs, 2 x vinyl turntables and the provision to plug in a computer. You may use these at your discretion.

You, as a DJ, are autonomous. This piece is not about creating a set of rules, but rather inciting collective collaboration between composer, performers and audiences alike. Please consider the cultural references provided to you and allow them to inspire your song selection, rather than restrict you to a certain genre.

You are not restricted to using just music. If you would like to use vocal samples, images, your own music or other ways of expressing what you would like to express as a DJ, then do. Once again, you are given control over your performance as an individual. See the set as a way to experiment with your practice as an expressive art form.

You are encouraged to stay for the duration of the performance. Whilst you will only be DJing for 40 minute fragments, the audience will be encouraged to talk to you and you talk back about the curation process of your set.
Please think of this as a deviation from normal performance models, in which an audience watches performers. Think of it as a cyclic performance, in which every single person functions in various different roles of equal importance. Please feel free to make eye contact with audience members and other performers, talk to them, touch them if you feel it is appropriate. You are not encouraged to force audience members to participate, however the piece will be most effective if there is a sociable aspect to the performers and the audience feel as though they are really immersed in this piece.

Finally, enjoy the opportunity to select exciting, unusual, special and new work. Showcase yourself as a person and allow your personality to shine through the music. As DJs, it is our job to take our audiences on a certain journey that relates to our personalities and our personal experiences. A beloved record is unique - project that individuality onto the audience and have fun!

The piece is structured as follows:

Warmup (40") - performed by a DJ

Audience members will be approached by performers, offered some food and something to drink, and made to feel comfortable

Hierarchy (40") - performed by a DJ

Queer - (40") - performed by a DJ

Excess (40") - performed by a DJ

Comedown ( - end)

Audience interaction with DJs and performers and will be provided with more food and drinks
Hierarchy in music, especially in musical performances is inevitable. There is a huge cultural gap between popular music scenes and 'intellectual' more classically based scenes. Recently, however, more and more artists, promoters and venues are questioning this hierarchy. What constitutes as culturally ‘valuable’ music? How do we even measure value?

The aim of this segment is to question our systems of value and cultural importance by highlighting certain genres of musics in a club context.

In club cultures, cultural value is primarily placed between DJs, club audiences and online communities. In ‘intellectual’ communities, value is often created in the concert hall. Question this. If you, the DJ, want to play Mozart mixed in to Britney Spears, then that is your choice and such juxtapositions would be encouraged. In this section, play unusual mixes, throw in things that are unexpected, funny or ridiculous. Attempt to create value in places that value may not usually be appreciated, at least in a certain context. The more positive reactions you receive, the more value you have created, according to current social norms.

This section seems self explanatory to the well versed DJ. Dance music was born out of Queer Cultures. House and Techno would not exist were it not for the New York Garage and Disco scenes of the USA in the 1980s. Still, Queer parties are driving genres of dance music further than any other commercial clubnights. For this section, you are encouraged to explore Queer music and dance, its origins, its current states and perhaps the future of LBGTX+ cultures in an evermore heterosexualised dance music scene.

Try to find music that may challenge, and explore notions of gender, identity and sexuality in your set.

I envision this section of the piece exploring notions of celebration echoing aspects of the gay liberation of movement and the spaces which are safe for people of all identities to express themselves and be themselves without fear. However, it should also explore themes of violence and oppression that have affected queer communicates in recent years. Do not be afraid to explores the queer experience and that of individuals in the LGBTQ+ party community.

Excess - something that club cultures are no stranger to. Rather than ignoring the excesses that dance music can encourage, this section aims to address them - drug use, alcohol use, sex, staying late into the early hours of the morning and beyond.

There are, without doubt, many negatives to such excess, exaggerated by the media and mainstream education. Explore these negatives through the music that you choose. Think what party cultures can turn people into, and their long term effects on some peoples’ bodies and lives. Think about the negative perception of excess in the media and in education and the misinformation or shying away from certain topics that are considered ‘difficult’.

Attempt to also explore the positives of such cultures through excess and what they have achieved since the conception of party cultures. Aim to take a balanced approach to this topic. Sexual expression, excessive partying and consumption of substances are an integral part of club cultures and whilst they can bring around negatives, there are also many positives.

Please note in the title, excess is written as “excess”. Perhaps explore what excess might mean to some people and what it might mean to others. Consider peoples’ limits relating to some subjects that might be associated with excess and perhaps focus on the fact that, as with something’s value, the meaning of excess and consumption is completely subjective.

Here, audience members will be asked about their experiences and thoughts on these issues. One approach would be to play music that may trigger certain emotions or memories or elude to certain states, whatever they may be.
