

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

A doctoral thesis is often described as a solitary endeavour; however the long list that follows definitely proves the opposite.

First and foremost, I am deeply grateful for the continuous support, insight and patience of my supervisors, Dr Jane Hawkes and Dr Katy Cubitt: without their constant trust and, sometimes, gentle prodding, this thesis would not have been completed. I must also thank Dr Julian Richards and Prof. Richard Bailey for their interim supervision in the first year of my project.

I am indebted to the AHRC for their generous funding, which removed financial concerns from my decision to embark on this journey. The Centre for Medieval Studies and Salter Fund provided further support during my research.

At the Centre for Medieval Studies, first Louise Harrison and then Gillian Galloway offered the constant practical help which is essential for the smooth running of any project. Maria Pia Malvezzi at the British School at Rome, English Heritage staff at St Augustine's Abbey (Canterbury) and the Rector and Churchwarden at St Martin's Church (Canterbury) offered vital help in organising field research. Dr A. Granelli kindly offered his invaluable expertise on the Catacomb of Panfilo. The generosity of the academic community at large has never failed to overwhelm me, and among all my experiences I have benefited immensely in taking part twice in the UCC/BSR 'Summer School to Rome' organised by Prof. Éamonn Ó Carragáin.

The Centre for Medieval Studies has been a wonderful community in which to 'grow up' as a research student: the personal and professional relationships forged in these years will stay with me forever. I am particularly grateful to Aleisha, Barbara, Bill, Charlotte, Chloe, Rachel and Spalding, and I owe special thanks to my 'sister', Pragya.

My fiancé Daryl, who I first met at the CMS, has been a never-ending source of love, encouragement and motivation.

Last, but not least, my family had to grudgingly learn to accept my separation from them and still gave me nothing but support, day after day, both emotionally and financially: my love and gratitude for them can hardly be expressed in words. I dedicate this thesis to my parents:

A mamma e papà, il primo segno tangibile della mia immensa gratitudine.
