APPENDIX 2

Note on Borough Account Rolls

As with many forms of medieval estate accounts, borough accounts can be tricky.¹

YORK

Professor Dobson has discussed the structure of the York accounts, which followed the usual pattern of charge/discharge, and thus give no figure for the actual flow of cash through the chamberlains' hands.² Income and expenditure were itemised in two distinct sections which carried the section total. A final statement, balancing income versus expenditure was not usual.

In York there was no separate income from rents on city property recorded as such. From 1393, when the city was empowered by royal charter to alienate property to support the Foss and Ouse bridges, the property previously accounted for by the chamberlains, was probably transferred to the two wardens of each bridge. Thereafter some indication of the fluctuations of the income from rents (scattered throughout the city, though with a concentration upon Ousebridge) can be gained from the bridgemasters' contributions to the city chamberlains.³ Some separate bridgemasters' rolls survive, and for seven years when it is possible to check them against the city chamberlains' rolls, they agree.⁴ There is not a separate section noting decayed rents as an item of deficit. Murage tolls were transferred to the chamberlains as a matter of course from the 1440s, whereas previously a specific statement of transfer was made. Council fees included the mayor's fee of £50, fees to his two esquires and six sergeants at mace, and to the common clerk and sub-clerk. The quickest way of discovering whether or not the accounts were in credit or in deficit, is to locate the superplusagium. If it was recorded under income, then it can be taken as a genuine surplus from the preceeding year. If it appears under expenditure, as was usually the case in York, then it signifies a deficit on the preceeding year's account. This was due, either to the retiring chamberlains who had met the deficit themselves, hoping to be repaid by their successors, often a forlorn hope, or it was due to the current chamberlains, who usually had to carry the deficit forward on their accounts. In the fifteenth century, the problem overwhelmed successive chamberlains, as income fell and savings were not made, and by 1486-7, the annual deficit has accumulated to over £506.⁵

It has already been observed, that annual expenditure, minus the surplus, suggest an average expenditure between 1442 and 1476 of about £216.⁶ Expenditure could increase dramatically due to unusually long parliaments,⁷ or to extravagant demonstrations of loyalty with gifts and entertainments for the king.⁸ Otherwise, as the table shows, the major items of expense remained fairly constant. Most of the major sources of income recorded in the account rolls, from Ouse and Foss Bridges, the common crane, and from burgess fines, were contracting, and their steady decline is reflected in the chamberlains' accounts. In real terms, whatever the 'paper deficit' of the superplusagia, the city's income was falling.

BEVERLEY

In Beverley⁹ a similar form of accounting was used, but each roll ended with a final balance for the year, noting the surplus to be handed on. The surplus was always accounted under income; confirming the more stable situation in Beverley. The accounts differentiate between the rent charge and those rents in arrears, under quite distinct headings, the latter sometimes at the end of the account roll. When no separate list of arrears was made, the figure for rent income may be open to question, but the figures given here are as recorded.

'Pasture' is a specific heading used in the account rolls and includes grazing in Fegang, Swynemore, and Westwood. From 1409, 'herbage' appears as an additional entry, and probably refers to smaller parcels of grazing and banks. 'Other rents' include scattered properties, lanes and alleyways let out by the council. In 1449 for instance, William Lorymer, a mercer, paid 2d. rent for Flyntonlane, and Thomas Mayne, 2d. for Sewerlane, and Henry Moreton of York, 1d. for a room outside Newbiggin Bar.

Payments made by new entrants into the freedom, were usually listed early in the income section, only to be counter-balanced by a separate entry in the expenditure section under allowances, which listed those new entrants who could not pay the whole fine (usually £1). In addition, payments of arrears of entry fines, which were outstanding from earlier years, were listed under income. It is clear that burgesses were allowed to pay off their entry fines in instalments, even before this was stated in the account roll for 1423, when new burgesses were required to have another burgess as a pledge. To further complicate matters, outstanding arrears of entry fines were listed from time to time as the keepers made valiant efforts to sort out the accounts, and in 1437 they noted arrears going back twelve years! The occupations of new burgesses were given more consistently from the 1420s. The payments for fees and salaries, includes payments of regards of office made from time to time to the archbishop's bailiff and officials, when they were present in Beverley.

Under Expenditure, some items have been omitted. The town paid a fixed rent to the archbishops of York for Westwood and for the Dyngs, and another to the Guild of the Virgin Mary, and later to the Great Guild, for the use of the guildhall. These totalled about £11 per annum. Another annual expense was the upkeep of town property, which included the banks of the Torrent, the High Bridge, as well as the Dyngs, other shops and houses, and the limekilns, and the bars. Various items of miscellaneous expenditure were recorded from time to time, but only those grouped always under 'common costs' have been included in the table for clarity. From 1416, the accounts regularly include payments for feasts for the keepers, normally about £5-£10 per annum, and for the 'cost' of the account, normally £5. Specific items of unusual expenditure were recorded under their own headings such as the building of the North Bar in 1409-10, and £73 for a gift to Henry V in 1420.

Small arrears in the rents from the Dyngs, limekilns and herbage, began to appear from 1416.

HULL

A remarkably good series of chamberlains' rolls survive for Hull; 56 from the period 1321 to 1498. The first roll is exceptional in that it covered three years during which the royal keepers had to meet heavy demands on resources (£362) to build defences for the town.¹⁰ This may explain why they produced an account for three years. Thereafter each account roll covers one year only, following a similar format to those of York and Beverley. Each concluded with the year's totals and noted the balance as deficit or credit. The surplus, when it existed was almost always a deficit and was recorded under expenditure.¹¹ This was quite distinct of course, from the specific year's deficit, which the chamberlains added to the accumulating surplus for their successors. There are sufficient rolls extant, to make it clear, that one year of outstanding expenditure skewed the accounts for several successive years. The critical factor in Hull's accounts was its expenditure, and since a large proportion of this was accounted for by the surplus for most of the period 1442-98 the same proportion of specific deficit was therefore, a paper deficit. Had the chamberlains decided to write off these accumulating arrears, the real difference between income and expenditure would have been much smaller. The charge/discharge system had a different effect upon rents. Each year's arrears were included in the total surplus so that the figures for decayed rents do not have a cumulative element. To discover the actual income from rent in a given year, the decayed rents must be subtracted from the rent charge. Although by the end of the 15th century, the rent charge had more than trebled from £35 19s. in 1394-5, to £113 8s. in 1498, decayed rents now accounted for just under 50%. If the rent charge had increased solely because the council increased its demands to meet its own financial shortfall, then a proportionate increase in decayed rents might be expected. In fact the response to increases in the rent charge was not

10. V.C.H. Hull I, p.40.

11. Except in 1430 and 1436.

immediate. The charge increased from £95 4s. in 1454, to £107 12s. in 1455, but decays only rose from £4 15s. to £7 14s. From 1458 the growth in the number of unlet properties and in the inability of individuals to pay a full rent, reflected the worsening economic situation in Hull, and the amount of decayed rent increased rapidly.

Appendix 4: Merchant Biographies

Abbreviations used in the following appendices dead = date of probate. The date at which the will was drawn up is given with the details of testamentary provision thus '1493 Left wife..'

free = date at which an individual became a freeman. For York merchants these can be found easily in F, Collins, ed. The Freemen of the City of York, I, XCVI, Surtees Society (1896).

The church given under the date of probate is that in which the testator wished to be buried. Individual's wishes were not always carried out.

Ch. = chamberlain
sh. = sheriff
M. = mayor
M.P. = member of Parliament

Trade figures

The years are from Michaelmas to Michaelmas, or within that twelve month period since most of the particular rolls are incomplete. See bibliography for a full list of the rolls consulted.

Unless otherwise stated, the information is for one shipment only.

+ means that there were more entries on the roll but that these were illegible except for the individual's name.

fells = woolfells

sks. = sacks of wool

st. = stone of wool

tuns, pipes, hoggesheads = of wine

cloth s.g. = cloth sine grano, i.e. unfinished single/double beds = bed hangings, sometimes specified as complete

dicker, last = of hides

misc. v. = miscellaneous goods, value

s. fish = stockfish, salted fish from Scandinavian or Icelandic waters.

fothers = of lead

shipments = the number of different ships used in a given year

York was taken into the hands of the King on 3 June 1405 because of the part played by the citizens in the rebellion of Archbishop Scrope (C.F.R.

1399-1405, p.310) and on 25 Aug. that year William Frost was appointed custodian of the city (C.P.R. 1405-08, p.40). In June 1406 when the liberties of York were restored William Frost held the office of mayor for a further year (Register of Freemen MS. fol. 10v; C.P.R. 1405-98, p.155).

- John GOLDBETER of York son of John? and cousin of Henry
- It is difficult to separate John snr. and his son as only a few documents refer to the son. However, it is assumed that John Goldbeter was active from 1331 to 1364 and was occasionally referred to as 'son of John'. Edmund Fryde has described his activities in the 1337 Wool Monopoly, his further loans to Edward III, and the transactions between him and Walter Chiriton between March 1347 and August 1348, when Goldbeter lent Chiriton over £20,000. Chiriton and Goldbeter were the front men for groups of merchants acting as syndicates. Those participating in Goldbeter's syndicates are listed in Appendix 3. John Goldbeter never held local office. In November 1335 he attended one of the king's councils of merchants at Nottingham. Reports from the Lords Cttee. touching the dignity of a Peer of the Realm, IV (1829), p. 464. Goldbeter was a merchant, not apparently active in trade before 1337-8, who exploited Edward III's desperate need for money to his own profit. He certainly shipped wool in his own name, but mainly to recover loans to the Crown. Like many energetic entrepreneurs of his day, he was accused of smuggling, of fraud, and was sent to prison at least once, in 1346. C.C.R. 1346-9, p. 141. On one occasion, in c. 1350 he was in a sea-fight with some Spaniards S.C.8/49/2432. See Edmund Fryde, Some Business Transactions of York Merchants. John Goldbeter, William Acastre and Partners, 1336-1349, Borthwick Papers no. 29 (1966).

IV, p.15 , Janet, married Richard Langton; Margaret, married John Aire; £27 and silver ware, property in Coneystreet, the Shambles and "against" St. Sampson's church, in Grimston, Riccall, Wellehows, Kelfield, Acastre. For a testator of such substance, Wm. Neleson was rather tight- fisted compared to his own father. The average cash bequest he made was 6s.8d. The £3 he gave his son Thos. was made up of 3s.4d. from his brother Wm. and 26s. 8d. from his brother Chris. The latter two may well have already had a settlement made on them. Relations with one of his sons-in-law were not good. Wm. Gascoigne's children were given small bequests which their father was not to have as he had already "had of me above reason in money, raiment and dinners". Gascoigne went off to fight the Scots and Neleson paid him £4, made a feoffment on his daughter Katherine and suffered further losses of £40 when Gascoigne apparently plundered his lands. Prob.Reg.IX f.203. According to Glover's visitation, Katherine and Wm. Gascoigne separated and in 1515 she was praying for a restoration of conjugal rights. Test.Ebor. IV, p.15n.

- c.1450-55 agreed with three merchants of Bordeaux and Robert Johnson, vintner of London, that they should deliver 56 tuns and 1 hogsheaf of wine at £4 per tun, i.e. a total of £225. He asked John Grene of Hull to stand as his surety. Grene did so on condition that he would not have to meet the obligation unless that amount of wine or more, had been delivered to Richard Anson of Hull, and they were rebated for any bad wine. Thereupon Grene resealed £225 and gave it to the common clerk of Hull. The wine was delivered; 17 tuns 1 pipe were bad, and there was a shortfall of a further 6 tuns. Thomas paid them £65 of the £225. The Bordeaux merchants, took John Grene to the court of Common Pleas for the entire £225, claimed the agreement had been made in London and not in Hull, where, according to Grene, "no-one knows the truth of the matter", and refused to take the action in Hull. Grene counter-petitioned for them to appear in Chancery

- 1356-67 only 65 sacks of an agreed 120 available so Meaux granted the Holmes Sutton Grange for 40 years in satisfaction of the outstanding 55 sacks. After 4 years of difficulties they gave it back to Meaux and the abbey agreed to pay Richard 20 marks per year until the death of his son Richard, jnr., or the term of 36 years if he died earlier. However Richard jnr., a clerk in the royal chancery drowned in the Humber after 22 years. His father, now dead, had allotted 15 marks to his wife and son John, and 5 marks to Richard jnr. After the latter's death, the abbey and John compromised and agreed that the abbey should pay only 17½ marks for the remaining 14 years. The abbey calculated that the Holmes family had received £645 more than their initial outlay of £240 for the wool!

Richard and William DE LA POLE

of Hull

This brief account of the de la Poles is included for information and is derived from the following:

(1983)

E.B. Fryde

William de la Pole. Merchant and King's Banker (1988)

The de la Poles were probably a trading family and three brothers, John, Richard and William were visibly active in the Hull area from 1310, when Richard was shipping wool through the port. In 1316 Richard was importing victuals during the famine, and he and William were renting a house in Hull from John Rotenhering for £4 per year. The following year they were deputy royal butlers in Hull and Richard was purchasing wine for Edward II in 1318. Neither appears to have been active traders through Hull; Richard's trade was as follows:

1310-11 Exp. 27 sks. 10 st.	:3 shipments	E122/56/13
1311-12 Exp. 10 sks. 15 st.	:2 shipments	E122/56/15
1312-13 Exp. 10 sks.	:2 shipments	E122/62/11
1332-3 Exp. 42 sks. 12 st.	:3 shipments	E122/58/2

Trade was not their main interest. Richard was acting as a financial surety for 7 Lubeck merchants in 1319, partnered by John Rotenhering and William Barton of Hull, and Nicholas Calton of York, C.C.R.1318-22, p.170. The financial affairs expanded rapidly thereafter and by 1323 Richard and William were investing in land in the East Riding. By 1325 William was dealing in foreign currency/and lending money on a national scale. He and his brother were poised for the launch of the most remarkable careers of their generation.

In 1327 he and Richard loaned Edward III money against the customs of Hull, possibly undercutting the Bardi by asking for only 22% instead of 46% interest.

In 1320 Richard served as a collector of customs in Hull, and was effectively the king's agent there for the next six years. Horrox, p.9. He and William served as town chamberlains in 1321-4 but Richard's interest was already attracted elsewhere. In 1327 he was appointed King's Butler until 1331, and again in 1333. He had bought a house in Lombard Street, London in 1328 and in 1330 had become an alderman and was describing himself as 'of London'. The following year, he and William divided their partnership; William to become the king's major English inancier, rival to the Italian bankers, Richard to become a Northamptonshire gentleman, but active in raising the finances for his brother's schemes.

Even though William was moving rapidly into the world of international finance, he retained his connection with Hull. In 1330, he and Richard were given the reversion of the manor of Myton and the custody of the town after Robert de Hastang's death. They acquired the keeper's 'great' house in Lowgate and it remained William's base and a family possession until the early 16th century. He may have been the Borough's first mayor in 1331, and was definitely mayor in 1332, 1333, and 1335. Richard's son William sat as M.P. for Hull in 1339, but he focussed his interests in Northamptonshire. William's exploits as royal financier, and dominant figure in the 1337 wool monopoly and again in the English Company which farmed the customs between 1343 and 1345 are well known. Similarly his downfall at the hands of Walter Chirton and Thomas Swanland in 1353, brief recovery and slow withdrawal from business are also familiar. Richard died in 1345 and William in 1366 and had by then laid the foundation for the family's spectacular social and political elevation to the earldom of Suffolk in 1385 through William's branch.

Although Hull continued to regard the de la Poles as patrons, they never dominated the town as Richard and William had in the 1330s and 1340s when they were the major landowners in and around Hull. The Lowgate house was extensively refurbished by William's son Michael in the 1340s, when he also extended the Charterhouse. Several de la Poles were buried in the Charterhouse and the family's patronage was continual and beneficial. The town periodically supplied gifts of food or wine to the family when it was 'in residence', but by the fifteenth century, the de la Poles regarded Hull primarily as a source of income. Both exploited the relationship; most noticeably in 1440, when Hull succeeded in purchasing its county charter with the aid of William de la Pole, earl of Suffolk then at the apex of his political career. It cost the town a 200 mark gift to William as well as meals and small payments to his servants, BRE 2 ff.12-12v.

The de la Pole presence persisted in Hull, as much through their ownership of the most remarkable private property in the town (by 1388 their house was extensive and had three gardens each with a fishpond, Horrox, p.39; Cal.Inq.Misc. V, pp.67-70), as by the powerful legend of their dramatic rise.

The majority of these sources were consulted in tracing the economic activities of individual merchants. The most useful are King's Remembrancer Customs Rolls (E122) which have survived for three periods of Hull's trade, 1300-33, 1378-1408, 1453-70. Internally the customs rolls are not consistent, and fuller records of imports have been recorded where no exports have been, and vice-versa. Many rolls cover only part of a year. Supplementary to these are Treaty Rolls (C76), Patent and Close Rolls, and some Customs Accounts of the Exchequer (E356). Memoranda Rolls were not consulted because the scale of such a search would not have been justified for the scope of this study. Ancient Petitions, Early Chancery Proceedings and Chancery Miscellanea contain some interesting information concerning individual trading ventures, particularly those which involved dishonesty and cheating.

Chamberlains' Account Rolls, published by the Surtees Society, ed. R.B. Dobson.

E39 Fragment of a sheriff's court book.

The Memorandum and House Books are full and detailed accounts of most of the business conducted by the York council. The House Books were kept with greater regularity, and record lists of all the men attending each council meeting in addition to its decisions. The compilation of lists of York officials presents no serious problems as the names of most officials were recorded and copied into the Freemens' Roll.

Records of the Mercers and Merchant Adventurers' Company, published in an edited version by the Surtees Society, edited by M. Sellars.

Beverley: Corporation Archives

Town Cartulary

Great Gild Book

Governors' Minute Book

Account Rolls

Schedule I: charters

Schedule III: deeds

These have been well described in two editions by A.F. Leach in the Selden Society and Historical Manuscripts survey.

The first three manuscripts are patchy and repetitive, often containing copies of the same records. There is no continuous list of freemen entry or of the keepers, and consequently major problems arise in trying to identify the keepers and their occupations. The most useful sources in this respect are the Account Rolls which usually list the keepers for the preceding and succeeding years and the Governors' Minute Book which lists all the keepers for most of the years between 1436 and 1470. A third but less useful source is the Town Cartulary, in which the keepers names are occasionally noted, sometimes incompletely. Occupations have been identified from the lists of freemen recorded in the Account Rolls, from wills and contemporary references in such records as Patent and Close Rolls.

D	Deeds

The Hull Bench Books are patchy and repetitive and contain a large number of enrolled deeds. The accounts of the council's business is slight. As in Beverley a major problem arises in trying to identify the officials, particularly the bailiffs and chamberlains. The names of bailiffs were recorded on witness lists to deeds copied into the Bench Books, but the information is often contradictory and inconsistent within the same source as well as between different sources. The names of chamberlains, where recorded in their Account Rolls, are reliable but patchy. Occupations have been identified from lists of freemen recorded in the Bench Books, from wills and from contemporary references.
