¹ Wilhelm, Lyrics of the Middle Ages, 47 claims this alba to be the oldest complete dawn song in a european language. I have interpreted the pronunciation accordingly.

IV. Fair sweet friends, [let us] make a game new Bels dous amicx, fassam un ioc novel [bels dɔws a'miks fa'sam yn dʒɔk nu'vel]

in the garden where sing the birds yns el iardi on chanton li auzel [ins el dʒar$'di un 'tʃantu li aw'zel]

until the watchman plays his shawm, tro la gaita toque son caramelh,
 [tr$u la 'gajta tu'kɥe sun kar$a'mel]

O / alas God ! O / alas God ! [how] the dawn very soon comes.
Oy Dieus ! Oy Dieus ! de l'alba tan tost ve.
 [oj djews oj djews de 'lalba tan tɔst ve]

V. For the gentle wind which [is] come from there
Per la doss'aura qu'es venguda de lay [per la du'sawr$a kes ven'gyda de laj]

of my lover fair and courteous and gay del mieu amic belh e cortes e gay [del miew a'mik bel e kur$'tes e gaj]

of his breath have I drunk a sweet ray [of sunlight]
del sieu alen ai begut un dous ray, [del sjew a'len aj be'gyt yn dɔws rraj]

O / alas God ! O / alas God ! [how] the dawn very soon comes."
Oy Dieus ! Oy Dieus ! de l'alba tan tost ve. »
 [oj djews oj djews de 'lalba tan tɔst ve]

VI. The lady is charming and pleasing
La dompna es agradans e plazens [la 'domna es agr$a'dans e pla'zens]

for her beauty her watch many people per sa beutat la gardon mantas gens [per sa bew'tat la gar$'do 'mantas dʒens]

and to her heart in love truly,
et a son cor en amar leyalmens, [ez a sun kɔr$ en a'mar$ lejal'mens]

O / alas God ! O / alas God ! [how] the dawn very soon comes.²

Performance Notes

Vocal Multiphonics

This was written early on in my exploration of overtone- and throat- singing. It is best performed using “western” style overtones (use the tongue to bring out overtones from a pure sung note rather than an Isakere voice).

= vowel-influenced overtones:

If you are using “western” style overtones, push the tongue to the back of the throat to bring out the overtones that naturally occur. If using “Mongolian” style, sing with an Isakere voice.

= Subharmonics. These are produced by vibrating the vestibular fold an octave below the sung note.

Subharmonics are indicated by notation of the lower sub-tone as well as a wavy line to indicate the naturally occurring beating in the voice.

Diamond headed notes indicate when actual pitches should be brought out in over-tones. These can be in different octaves - whichever you are able to bring out.

Other Effects

Wavy lines between the parts indicate “beating” resulting from voices being very close in pitch. This is an instruction to explicitly bring out that beating.

Time-space notation

During the refrains of the piece it is notated in time-space notation to indicate complete freedom on the performer’s part to determine the length of the notes indicated. Only proportions are indicated and the general tempo mark should be “freely, slowly and expressively”. Notes that are vertically aligned should be performed together and especially where made explicit by the use of a dashed line.
